It's often said that cooking meth with the one-pot method, which can be done in less than an hour, is as easy as baking cookies.

By Don Wade/Scripps Howard News Service

She's a pretty soccer mom in Dallas who grew up in privilege attending the best private schools. He's a tatted up Aryan Nations member in rural West Tennessee who has spent a third of his life in prison.

If they have nothing else in common, they share a sordid history of using and selling methamphetamine.

"I literally went from June Cleaver to this person who was nuts," says "Rachael," whose real name is not being used to protect her from her former supplier.

Today, Rachael is in treatment and remains the most unlikely of experts on the users of meth, a highly addictive stimulant that triggers euphoria by boosting the neurotransmitter dopamine.

"It's not all people without teeth. There were people from mortgage companies, other middle-class people holding down a job every day, people over 50," she says.

Special Agent Jeffrey Scott of the Drug Enforcement Administration in Washington, D.C., said the public has it wrong if they think the meth threat has disappeared just because we are not hearing about "trailers catching fire or hotel rooms exploding." Meth remains a growth industry with heavy demand across the country, federal officials say.

The "one-pot" or "shake-and-bake" process for cooking methamphetamine is highly flammable and can be explosive. Police were called to a fire at this home in Southaven, Miss., in April 2010 after neighbors reported hearing three explosions.

To Jonathan Hankins, his personal story is also a valuable public service announcement: "This could happen to anybody."

Last June for $36,000, Hankins bought a Freddie Mac foreclosure in tiny Klamath Falls, Ore., near the California border. Although the two-bedroom house appeared in local police reports as a place where arrests had been made for meth trafficking, Hankins says, there was no documentation of meth manufacturing.

Soon enough Jonathan, his wife Beth, and 2-year-old son Ezra, began having multiple health problems. They all suffered from dry mouth. His wife and son had mouth sores and trouble breathing. He had nosebleeds and a severe sinus headache.

After three weeks, they moved out. They also spent

Students face off in robot competition

The battleground: South Middle School.

The stakes: Finding out who designed, built and programmed a better robot.

Among the 16 teams competing in the 2012 VEX Sack Attack Robotics Competition on Saturday was the Henderson County High School VEX team, who hosted the event.

The doors opened at 7:30 a.m., and just a few hours into the games, from all appearances, participants were engrossed in the competition.

The contest consisted of teams using their robots to lift as many half-pound bean bags as possible into a trough in an allotted time.

It's tougher than it sounds. Most of the robots looked like miniature bulldozers. One had an appendage that looked like a giant pincher; a few had extendible apparatus which enabled them to place the bean bags into the trough. Some moved the bean bags much like a bulldozer would. All were operated by students via hand-held controls.

Techno music blared in the background; a master of ceremonies maintained a flow of banter and the intense focus on the competition from the robots' drivers, the team coaches, parents and observers lent itself to excited cheers and nervous gasps as the robots turned over, became stuck and picked up, dropped or filled the trough with bean bags.

Donna Waggener, a coach for the HCHS robotics team, said one of the best aspects of a robotics competition is the shared knowledge gained from them.

"We watch and we learn from other teams," she said. "It's everybody helping everybody think through and build a better robot."

Waggener, who teaches Gateway to Technology at South Middle School, said the HCHS VEX team is in its second year and has already tripled its membership.

"The kids love it," she said. "We started with

Couple leads kitchen for storm victims

Some people see the aftermath of a hurricane's destruction on television. Others, like Debra and Bill Kramer, go to the area and start cooking meals.

That's what the Henderson couple did starting on Nov. 3, when they led the setup of a kitchen in a parking lot of the Aquaduct Racetrack in Queens, a borough of New York City, after Superstorm Sandy hit.

"From our perspective, we are all here because we are committed to helping others," Debra Kramer said.

"It's hard work. We always have a lot of tired bodies. And it's typically people who own their businesses and can get away, or it's retired people. It's just amazing to watch some of the people, (some) in their 70s and 80s, their commitment and how hard they work."

The Kramers, who are retired, are among that group of dedicated volunteers. Between the two of them, this is at least their 12th disaster relief trip as part of the Southern Baptist Convention.

It also happens to be their longest.

"We were asked to lead this kitchen, and so we felt a commitment to stay as long as Kentucky was working this kitchen," Kramer said.

But that kitchen will be shutting down today after serving 172,000 meals, as of Friday, or between 200 and 600 meals to each of

Local police: 'It's clear we're not winning'

Local law enforcement say the war they've waged against methamphetamine since the late '90s is one they are losing.

The Kentucky State Police said for the last two years, the Commonwealth has seen an all-time high in the number of meth labs seized by law enforcement.

"Our meth lab numbers (statewide) are more than 1,200 for 2012," said Trooper Corey King, public information officer for Post 16 in Henderson. More than 1,200 labs also were found in 2011, he said.

Between 2008 and 2011, the number of meth labs increased by "188 percent," King said. "In 2008, we had 428 meth labs statewide.

"It's clear we're not winning."

Among the reasons, he said, are fewer law enforcement officers and more creative meth cooks.

"We're operating on the lowest allocation numbers for troopers since the 1970s. There aren't as many troopers to investigate or be proactive" with the rising meth problem, King said. "Our meth lab numbers are increasing with less troopers" on the streets to combat it, he said.

Meth makers are also very crafty when it comes to getting and cooking the

Hunters, kind souls keep food flowing at Salvation Army

JUDY JENKINS

The young girl didn't give her name because she didn't want any credit for her deed.

Toting bags of canned goods into the office of the local Salvation Army Corps Community Center last month, she simply explained that she had used her birthday money to purchase food for the agency's soup kitchen that averages 103 diners for lunch each day Monday through Saturday.

The youth probably knew that some of those diners don't have much food in the pantry at home. In addition, some are unable to prepare meals. Some are homeless, and others are lonely because they live alone.

Israel bombards 'hornets' nest of terror'

■ Cease fire efforts seem to gain steam

The Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip – Israel destroyed the headquarters of Hamas' prime minister and blasted a sprawling network of smuggling tunnels in the southern Gaza Strip on Saturday, broadening a blistering four-day-old offensive against the Islamic militant group even as diplomatic efforts to broker a cease-fire appeared to be gaining steam.

Hamas officials said a building used by Hamas for broadcasts was bombed and three people were injured. The injured were from Al Quds TV, a Lebanon-based television channel. The building is also used by foreign news outlets including Germany's ARD, Kuwait TV and the Italian RAI and others.

The Israeli military spokesman was not immediately aware of the strikes but said they were investigating.

In neighboring Egypt, President Mohammed Morsi hosted leaders from Hamas and two key allies, Qatar and Turkey, to seek a way to end the fighting.

"There are discussions about the ways to bring a cease-fire soon, but there are no guarantees," Morsi said at a news conference. He said he was working with Turkey, Arab countries, the U.S., Russia and western European countries to halt the fighting.

Israel launched the operation on Wednesday in what it said was an effort to end months of rocket fire out of the Hamas-ruled territory. It began the offensive with an unexpected airstrike that killed Hamas' powerful military chief, and since then has relentlessly targeted suspected rocket launchers and storage sites.

In all, 48 Palestinians, including 15 civilians, have been killed and more than 400 civilians wounded, according to medical officials. Three Israeli civilians have been killed and more than 50 wounded.

Israeli military officials expressed satisfaction with their progress Saturday, claiming they have inflicted heavy damage to Hamas.

"Most of their capabilities have been destroyed," Maj. Gen. Tal Russo, Israel's southern commander, told reporters. Asked whether Israel is ready to send ground troops into Gaza, he said: "Absolutely."

"Most of their weapons are stored in civilian's homes, they launch rockets from residential areas. We do not want to hit civilians in Gaza but we do want to hit the hornets' nest of terror in Gaza," he said.

Footage released Saturday by the Islamic Jihad showed rockets being fired from a hidden bunker in a built-up area. It wasn't clear whether it was a residential neighborhood.

Israel's Deputy Foreign Minister Danny Ayalon told channel 1 TV that "Hamas is committing a double war crime, they are firing rockets at Israeli civilians while using Palestinian civilians as human shields."

The White House said President Barack Obama was also in touch with the Egyptian and Turkish leaders. The U.S. has solidly backed Israel so far.

Fiscal court to discuss loan fund

■ Projects include winery

By Frank Boyett
fboyett@thegleaner.com
270-831-8342

The first two business projects to be funded through a new county loan program will be considered by Henderson Fiscal Court when it meets Tuesday.

The program, which was suggested by Magistrate George Warren, was authorized by the court back in August. It's called the Henderson County Rural Communities Revolving Loan Fund, and it allows would-be businesses to borrow up to $10,000 at no interest over a period of 10 years.

The first two projects are a proposed mini-storage building at 551 Main St. in Corydon, which Joda Southard hopes will provide 110 rental units, and Boucherie Vineyards & Winery in Spottsville, where Martha Boucherie plans to produce and sell wines, as well as provide banquet and meeting facilities.

Both projects have additional funding from the Green River Area Development District, as well as from banks.

The fiscal court meeting will begin at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday in the top-floor meeting room of the Henderson County Courthouse. Other items on the agenda include:

Reports: The court will accept reports from Jailer Ron Herrington, Sheriff Ed Brady and County Clerk Renesa Abner, as well as accept payments from County Attorney Steve Gold.

Benefactor: Kris Williams of Henderson Community College will present the benefactor of the year award.

Scholar: The court will name its judge's scholar, which is a program where elementary school students are honored for their achievements.

Briefs

Alumni Hall of Fame proposal to be heard

The Henderson County Board of Education is scheduled to hear a presentation on establishing an Alumni Hall of Fame to recognize and celebrate the accomplishments of graduates of high schools in Henderson and Henderson County at Monday's 6 p.m. special meeting.

Also on the agenda are project closeouts for air-conditioning chiller replacements at Cairo and Niagara elementary schools; bid award recommendations for teaching supplies, science supplies and building supplies, among other things; and presentations regarding recent school testing results.

The special board meeting will be held at the Professional Development Center on the campus of Thelma B. Johnson Early Learning Center, 631 N. Green St.

Meanwhile, also to be held on Monday is a Special Finance Corp. Board meeting at roughly 6:30 p.m. in the same building.

This meeting will include a resolution by the board of directors to issue $2.31 million in school building refunding revenue bonds so they can be refunded at or before their respective maturities.

Tech center to host open house Dec. 6

The fifth-annual Henderson County High School Career and Technical Education Unit Open House will be held on Dec. 6, and the theme this year is "Growing Community and Educational Partnerships."

Nearly 40 Henderson County existing businesses will partner with the high school's Career and Technical Education Unit from 10:15 a.m. to 3:25 p.m. to visit with students in the auxiliary gym to share information on what they do and what they expect from future employees.

From 4 to 7 p.m., parents/guardians and the public are invited to take a tour of the CTE classrooms and to meet with staff members to gain more knowledge about the programs available to students.

The areas that will be featured include electrical, automotive, information technology, carpentry, graphic arts, nursing and commercial foods, to name a few.

The objectives of the partnerships are:

■ Provide existing businesses in the county an opportunity to see and learn what the CTE unit has to offer them.

■ Provide CTE students with the opportunity to find out what our existing businesses do and what it would take to work for them.

■ Provide parents/guardians and the community the opportunity to become familiar with the existing businesses.

■ Provide the high school an opportunity to receive input from existing businesses on what they need from the school.

HCC closes Wednesday, reopens Nov. 26

Henderson Community College will close Wednesday for electrical work and Thursday and Friday for the Thanksgiving holiday.

The campus will reopen on Nov. 26.

Trash to be collected Monday — Wednesday

City of Henderson employees will be observing the Thanksgiving holiday on Thursday and Friday, which will accelerate the garbage collection schedule this week.

The Monday and Tuesday routes will be collected on Monday.

The Wednesday routes and that part of the Thursday routes that lie east from Water Street to Atkinson Street and south of Second Street to Dixon, Martin Luther King, and O'Byrne streets will be collected on Tuesday.

Wednesday will see collection of the remainder of the Thursday routes and all Friday routes.

There will be no garbage collection on Thursday or Friday.

Residential collections will begin at 6 a.m. each working day during the week.

Due to this accelerated schedule, all residents should have their trash out at the correct time, according to Sanitation Superintendent Brian Williams.

The city landfill will be closed Thursday and Friday, but will reopen Saturday at 7 a.m.

Curbside recycling by Allied Waste Services of Evansville will be delayed a day after Thanksgiving.

That means that those residents who live north of Second Street should place their materials for recycling at the curb either Friday evening or before 6 a.m. Saturday.

War on meth must be fought despite odds

DAVID DIXON
EDITOR

We're at war. It's been a very long war. And we're losing.

As today's special report by Scripps Howard News Service and Gleaner staff writer Beth Smith shows all too well, the local and national battle against the scourge of methamphetamine is an uphill fight with no summit in sight.

It's clear from the reporting that different regions of the nation are experiencing the meth plague in different ways. It's all bad, but we've got it worse.

In 2011, 10,287 meth lab "incidents" were reported nationally, according to Scripps Howard News Service.

Here in Kentucky, "our meth lab numbers are more than 1,200 for 2012," Trooper Corey King, public information officer for the Kentucky State Police Henderson post, told Smith.

"In 2008, we had 428 meth labs statewide," he said. "It's clear we're not winning."

The destructive power of meth is obvious to all. No wonder. It's the worst concoction I've ever heard of.

From "recipes" I've seen, it's as if you went around your home, garage, barn and workplace and gathered up medicines, fuel, various poisons and anything that smells bad, mixed them all together into an explosive brew, stirred it up and downed it.

Sounds like suicide.

As King says of the early days of meth in western Kentucky, "I remember being shocked by the chemicals people put in their bodies. I never understood how people would tear their families apart for this."

The drug's euphoric "high" and its addictive power cancel out everything else, everything good.

The destruction goes beyond users to the suffering of their families to the dangers to law enforcement officers to the general public that faces threats from users and their associated crimes to the cost to society of enforcement, incarceration, treatment and too many ruined lives.

Henderson County Sheriff's Detective Bill Mills reports a frightening new prospect.

"Heroin is making its way in (to the county), and people are mixing heroin and meth and making (drug) cocktails. So all the bad things meth does, add heroin to that."

And in more bad news from the national scene, Mexican drug cartels are now major players in the meth industry. Just what we need.

Experienced law enforcement officers in western Kentucky have been fighting meth for at least 15 years. Nobody sees an end to the war.

All we can do is support police efforts — including making their manpower and resource levels a top priority — and be alert to suspicious activity and willing to report it.

Sadly, getting caught might be the only thing that gives meth users even a small chance for freedom.

There's something I want to clear up.

Last month I wrote about the great numbers of deer hit by motorists in Kentucky and how November was the most hazardous month of the year for such deer strikes. I used data provided by Kentucky Farm Bureau.

Well, a reader with sharper eyes and a better calculator than mine responded with the following:

"You say 2,976 deer accidents per year, and then you say Kentucky drivers hit deer at a rate of 28 per 1,000 drivers in just one month. No way.

"There are almost 3 million drivers in Kentucky. A rate of 28 per 1,000 drivers would be 84,000 deer hit in one month ... I think your rate of 28 per 1,000 must be way off."

I went back to my friends at Kentucky Farm Bureau and learned that the 28 deer hit per 1,000 is "an annualized rate, meaning that if every month were November, then we'd see about 28 deer claims per 1,000 drivers."

Or something like that. I guess it shows just how much more dangerous this month is as far as deer vs. motorists. And my Farm Bureau source went on to say they now believe that 2,976 deer accidents per year is way low.

It all serves to remind us: They're out there, and they're waiting. They're waiting til you get a little closer before stepping into your path.

Petraeus can still be of service

By ARTHUR I. CYR
Scripps Howard News Service

David Petraeus occupies a crucial crossroads. This does not refer to the global media glare now seeking to dissect every aspect of his private life.

Congressional scrutiny now joins the media mayhem. The circus can be expected to continue for some time, laced with political sanctimony and self-righteousness by both the political and scribbling classes.

The end of the presidential campaign season has brought no cease-fire between Democrats and Republicans in Congress. Starting at the top, President Barack Obama and party leaders in both the Senate and House have wasted no time in returning to rancor, finger-pointing and fierce passing of the buck.

Meanwhile, complex defense and national security challenges press for action, but with little likelihood so far of serious attention as the new Congress opens. Looming sequestration of federal funds will mean draconian cuts across the board, including at the Pentagon, one of the largest recipients of the federal budget.

Petraeus' career spans the crossroads of civilian and military sectors, including top commands in Afghanistan, Iraq and U.S. Central Command. He spearheaded the successful strategic shift in Iraq that averted defeat and permitted orderly withdrawal from that chaotic country.

Within the military, Petraeus intersects conventional and special unconventional operations. The Army's Special Forces date from the earliest years of the Cold War.

During the 1952 presidential campaign, Republican Party leaders promised to "liberate" Eastern Europe from the occupying Red Army. After the landslide election of the Republican ticket of Dwight Eisenhower and Richard Nixon, new Army special operations units were formed.

However, Eisenhower quickly locked up Special Forces in favor of the conventional military, while reconfirming containment. In the new nuclear-tipped Cold War, Ike did not trust unpredictable special ops types.

The military overall was operationally restricted. Sensitive missions were run out of the White House, in secret and apparently with great effectiveness.

The posture changed markedly with the Kennedy administration. The Army's Green Berets assumed stage center, the Navy SEALs were formed in 1962, and the White House became visibly involved.

As the Vietnam War escalated, large-scale conventional military operations came to dominate the American effort. One legacy was intense conflict between the CIA and military intelligence.

The CIA was consistently skeptical about U.S. military effectiveness. At one point, U.S. commander Gen. William Westmoreland ordered his officers not to deal with the CIA. Finally Congress passed legislation requiring such communication. After Vietnam, the Army generally emphasized conventional warfare, until 9/11.

Given this legacy, Petraeus was an especially important CIA head. He played a leading role in updating U.S. military doctrine on fighting insurgencies, and co-authored an important manual on counterinsurgency tactics.

Some complained about choosing a military officer to head the CIA, but the first four directors of the agency were senior military professionals: Rear Adm. Sidney Souers, Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, Vice Adm. Roscoe Hillenkoetter and Gen. Walter Bedell Smith.

The sudden resignation of Petraeus is enormously disruptive to efforts to coordinate and integrate U.S. intelligence agencies, a mission underscored by the U.S. government in the aftermath of 9/11, but almost completely ignored in the current obsessive focus on sexual gossip.

Obama quickly accepted Petraeus' resignation as CIA director. He should follow that up by insisting this remarkable soldier continue to advise on national security.

Re-election to the White House permits the freedom to be presidential.

Some gifts ideas for our politicians

ANN McFEATTERS
COLUMNIST

With the holidays approaching, here are some suggestions gleaned from airplane catalog for gifts to the politicians we have seen far too much of recently.

For Mitt Romney, resentful of "gifts" to voters such as student loans that he said re-elected his rival: A twinkling fiber-optic, all-weather "Reindog" that "sparkles with hundreds of ever-changing pinpoint lights," somewhat like Romney's ever-changing positions on everything. A steal at $229. Or you could give him the ergonomic wallet that stays thin and flexible because "fat wallets" are a "known leading cause of back problems." Just $34.99.

For retired Army Gen. David Petraeus, whose admitted affair with his biographer led to his resignation as CIA director: A copy of "The Best Advice Ever" by Ari Neptunia, which warns that "mistakes are the most destructive force in our lives" and helps you "turn on the power to success, money and happiness with zero mistakes." Just $12.99.

For President Barack Obama: An anti-anxiety shirt for First Dog Bo that keeps a "gentle, constant pressure that has a profound calming effect" on animals afraid of strangers from Capitol Hill, visits from the CIA director and having to leave the White House. Bo could have one in every color at only $39.95 each and share with his master.

For House Speaker John Boehner: An 8-foot ornamental windmill to help you "know which way the wind blows." A bargain at $89.99.

For Vice President Joe Biden: A burnt-finish wishing well. "Don't just wish for something distinctive — add a rustic touch to your garden." You can help the vice president nourish his desire to be president for only $99.

For House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi: A yellow Lamborghini mouse, keyboard and mouse pad for her computer to help her deal with the TV reporter who asked her if she was too old to serve another leadership term and if she should get out of the way of younger House members. An instant aging antidote for only $89.99.

For Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, who says she's tired after "20 years of being on the high wire of American politics" and wants to rest and watch home-decorating shows: A device that holds trash bags for gathering leaves in windy conditions and "makes yard work a snap." Can you believe it's only $19.99? Add one for Bill for another $10.

For ambitious Paul Ryan, back in the House after his stint as Romney's running mate: Dress shirts each made of 10 different fabrics, colors and patterns billed as "one-of-a-kind shirts for one-of-a-kind men." This shirt "allows you to show that you're an individual, you're a little different than everyone else and you want them to take notice of who you are." Three for $159.99.

For grouchy Mitch McConnell, the Senate Republican leader, not at all sorry he said his main goal was denying Obama a second term: A "Human Slingshot" that is a "fresh new game, guaranteed to be a big hit whether you're playing or watching." It's an "exhilarating, fast-paced game that involves four people slinging each other back and forth within a human-sized stretchable band." Hours of fun for just $74.99.

For GOP money man Karl Rove, once known as "Bush's brain," who raised several hundred million dollars to defeat Obama and says his donors aren't upset: A 4-foot walking crocodile statue that "will stun your neighbors and keep your garden free of all kinds of intruders." Rove can rest easy at just $169. Too pricey? You could send him the "no-blind-spot rearview mirror" for $59.95.

For Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid, who insists Democrats will negotiate with Republicans but won't be rolled over: The personal oxygen bar that "increases the concentration of oxygen you breathe by 30 percent, helping you to achieve a sense of calm to facilitate relaxation." A built-in speaker "plays up to four different ethereal musical patterns to accompany inhalation." Help Reid, a Mormon who doesn't consume alcohol, for just $399.95.

FRANK BOYETT

YESTERDAY'S NEWS

People used to be more polite.

Not that they necessarily were better human beings than the current models, but they had more to lose if they weren't nice to one another.

You see, there's a good reason why Kentucky has that archaic language in its official oaths about swearing off dueling. Back in the old days, if you gratuitously insulted someone, they were within their rights to call you out and shoot you dead.

I sometimes think it would be a much more civil world if everyone carried a pistol on their hip. There might be a problem with drunken scuffles escalating into corpses sprawled on the sidewalk, but ... at least we could thin out some of the hotheads.

Sometimes there are no winners in those situations. Take, for instance, the incident that was reported in The Gleaner of Nov. 21, 1937. A blaring headline luridly shouted that two local business men had shot and killed one another right across the street from the Henderson County Courthouse.

Both Byron Pinson, 50, and Graham "Doc" Raymond, 30, used .38 specials. Pinson favored a Smith & Wesson and punctured Raymond with all four shots he fired. Raymond had a Colt and only three of his five shots hit home. Both men died near the entrance of the Mecca Bar, where Pinson was the proprietor. Raymond, by the way, was the owner of Raymond Furniture at 102 N. Main St.

Both men were still breathing when law enforcement officers got to the scene, but Raymond expired just as the ambulance was arriving, and Pinson gave up the ghost as he was being loaded into the ambulance.

The Nov. 23, 1937, issue of The Gleaner gave results of the coroner inquests. Letcher Wilson was the only eyewitness to the shooting, which took place about 10:30 on a Saturday night. Wilson testified that Raymond struck another patron in an argument over a dollar, and Pinson's 23-year-old son Robert intervened saying, "We can't have that in here."

That prompted a fist fight near the rear of the building between young Pinson and Raymond, but it didn't last long. Wilson said the two Pinsons and Raymond then began walking toward the front of the bar. The two older men continued arguing, he said, and all the while Pinson was pushing Raymond toward the front door.

About the time he was ejected through the front door Raymond pulled his pistol and fired, which prompted Pinson to follow suit and begin shooting. "Raymond was the first to fall and as he fell he fired his pistol, and as he did Pinson slumped to the street," Wilson testified.

Both men were survived by their wives. Pinson left seven children, while Raymond was survived by one son.

Less than a year later two other Henderson men shot and killed each other in a duel over a dime. The shooting took place the afternoon of Sept. 5, 1938, in a ball field at Center and Clark streets, according to the following day's Gleaner. The dead were Albert "Dee" Rice, a 26-year-old worker for the Works Progess Administration, and Iloff "Mutt" Wilson, 24, who apparently was unemployed.

Gip Steele and John Jewell witnessed the shootings, and told police and The Gleaner all about them.

"Rice and I were sitting under a tree when Wilson rode by on his bicycle," Steele said. "Rice called Wilson over, said give him a dime, and said he'd better give it to him or it would be me or you." Steele said Rice had been drinking heavily.

Wilson refused to give him the dime, and two argued for several minutes. "Get out your gun if you've got one because we're going to shoot it out," Rice said, according to Steele. Wilson was starting to ride away on his bicycle when Rice pulled a .32 caliber pistol and shot him once in the abdomen at close range.

"After that there was a lot of shooting and I don't know what happened except that both of them fell," Steele said.

Wilson told police at the hospital that he pulled his .38 and blasted away four times. Rice died at the scene; he was hit in the right wrist, the left elbow and near the heart, which was the fatal wound. He was survived by a wife and two kids.

Wilson died at the local hospital Sept. 9, according to the next day's Gleaner, although his death certificate says it was Sept. 10.

Another bloody shooting took place between Bishop Anderson, 40, and Alonzo Walker, 25, and both were seriously wounded, but neither died. The shooting took place at the Lincoln Cafe at 103 Second St., where Anderson was the proprietor. He ordered Walker out of the place late on the Saturday night of Feb. 15, 1930, and after exiting Walker turned around and shot into the cafe three times.

Anderson walked outside and the two began blasting away at each other. Walker was shot twice through the lungs, while Anderson was shot through the intestines as well as in the left leg and right arm. "No charges have been preferred against either of the Negroes pending the outcome of the condition of each," the story concluded.

100 YEARS AGO

The Sebree Springs Hotel, since 1897 the "mecca of health and pleasure-seeking summer resorters," burned to the ground, The Gleaner reported Nov. 17, 1912. It had 53 rooms and stood across the railroad tracks from the Barnes Hotel, which had burned a decade previously.

50 YEARS AGO

A "crazed cow" owned by Cooksey Crafton escaped the Henderson Animal Clinic and wandered around in St. Louis Cemetery, The Gleaner reported Nov. 16, 1962. The cow was wily, though, and eluded all attempts at recapture. Housewives in the neighborhood suffered "considerable anxiety" at the stray's appearance in their yards.

25 YEARS AGO

First National Bank announced it would acquire the old J.J. Newberry's Building at Second and Main streets and raze it, The Gleaner reported Nov. 20, 1987. And that's exactly what happened to the building that once was the Mann Bros. department store, one of the Tri-state's premiere places to spend your money.

Search for oil platform workers ends

By Michael Kunzelman
Associated Press

ASSOCIATED PRESS

An explosion and fire damaged an oil rig in the Gulf of Mexico, about 25 miles southeast of Grand Isle, La., on Friday. Four people were transported to a hospital with critical burns, and two were missing.

NEW ORLEANS – The Coast Guard on Saturday evening called off its search for two workers missing after a fire broke out on an oil platform in the Gulf of Mexico, sending a black plume of smoke into the air reminiscent of the 2010 Deepwater Horizon explosion that transformed the oil industry and life along the U.S. Gulf Coast.

Chief Petty Officer Bobby Nash told The Associated Press that the search was ended at about 5:25 p.m.

Coast Guard officials said in a news release Saturday that helicopters were searching for the missing workers from the air, while a cutter searched the sea.

The blaze, which started Friday while workers were using a torch to cut an oil line, severely burned at least four workers. Their burns were not as extensive as initially reported, said Leslie Hoffman, a spokeswoman for Black Elk Energy, which owned the platform.

Officials at Baton Rouge General Medical Center said Saturday that two men remained in critical condition, while two men remained in serious condition. All four, who are being treated in a burn unit, are employees of oilfield contractor Grand Isle Shipyard and are from the Philippines. The hospital said it and Grand Isle Shipyard are trying to reach the men's families in the Philippines.

Meanwhile, officials said no oil was leaking from the charred platform, a relief for Gulf Coast residents still weary two years after the BP oil spill illustrated the risk that offshore drilling poses to the region's ecosystem and economy.

It's unclear whether the missing men worked for a contractor. Grand Isle Shipyard employed 14 of the 22 workers on the platform at the time of the incident, WWL-TV in New Orleans reported.

Moonshine makers set up shop in Georgia town's city hall

By Jeff Martin
Associated Press

DAWSONVILLE, Ga. – Moonshine distillers are making their first batches of legal liquor in this tiny Georgia town's City Hall, not far from the mountains and the canopy of trees that once hid bootleggers from the law.

A handful of moonshine distilleries are scattered around the South, but observers say this is the first they've ever seen right in a city hall.

The distilleries come amid an increased interest for locally made specialty spirits and beer brewed in homes and microbreweries.

The Dawsonville moonshine makers and city officials say the operation helps preserve a way of life. It also carries on traditions of an era when moonshine meant extra income for farmers and medicine for their children.

"Dawson County was, sure enough, the moonshine capital of the world at one time," distiller Dwight Bearden said, as he checked on the still where the third batch of Dawsonville Moonshine was being prepared. "It was just a way of life back then."

The clanking of the still and the smell of corn and alcohol fill the room several yards away from the offices of the city clerk, the mayor and other officials. The city leases the space to the distillery.

Free learned how to make moonshine from his father, who learned it from his father generations ago, she said.

"We grew up around it, and it was our medicine," Wood said. Cough medicine was among its medicinal uses, she said.

Last week, the distillery was delivering the second batch of moonshine it's made to its distributor.

Georgia law prohibits the distillery from selling its liquor at the site but allows a distributor to ship it to stores where it can be sold legally.

Wood recently got approval from state officials to offer small samples for tourists to taste.

State Rep. Rusty Kidd, of Milledgeville, said he believes future legislation would allow the distillery and others in the state to sell a single bottle of moonshine to tourists who want to take one home.

NEW YORK

Third shop owner shot with same gun

NEW YORK – A New York City boutique owner was fatally shot in the head with the same gun that killed two other shopkeepers over the summer.

The shop owner was behind the counter of She She in Brooklyn's Flatbush section when he was shot Friday night, The Daily News reported. The gunman dragged his body toward the back of the store and covered it with clothing, the newspaper reported.

Police have identified the victim as 78-year-old Rahmatollah Vahidipour, of Great Neck on Long Island. He suffered gunshot wounds to the head and torso, police said.

No one has been arrested in the three shootings, which happened in a 5-mile radius. Police say they don't know the motive behind any of the killings. Authorities are offering rewards of $22,000 for information leading to an arrest and conviction in the three homicides.

MISSOURI

Man accused in plot committed in 2009

KANSAS CITY – A southwest Missouri man who confessed this week to plotting to shoot up a "Twilight" showing and a Wal-Mart store was detained in 2009 after threatening a store clerk, police said Saturday.

Bolivar Police Chief Steve Hamilton said Saturday that Blaec Lammers, 20, of Bolivar, followed a female clerk around a Wal-Mart store in 2009, threatening her. He wasn't charged but was committed for 96 hours for a mental health examination. Lammers, whose own mother turned him in Thursday, faces three felony charges in the alleged shooting plot.

Lammers was charged Friday with first-degree assault, making a terroristic threat and armed criminal action. He is jailed in Polk County on $500,000 bond. Those charges focus on the alleged Wal-Mart plot.

Fill-in lawmaker has just six weeks

WASHINGTON – Driving from Michigan, David Curson arrived in Washington a week ago. He set up an office last Sunday, was sworn in as a congressman Tuesday and by Friday had logged his first votes. But in six weeks, the 64-year-old Democrat will be gone.

He was one of four members of the House sworn in last week to fill a partial term, but he's the only one who didn't win a full, two-year term. In January, he'll be replaced by Republican Rep.-elect Kerry Bentivolio.

Democratic House leader Nancy Pelosi and Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., have lent Curson staff to help him with the brief learning curve.

One aide, Curson said, is "guiding me around" to ensure he doesn't get lost in the labyrinth of hallways in the Capitol, gets to votes on time and generally knows where he should be.

Curson said he's keen to play whatever role he can as Congress seeks to navigate the fiscal cliff and a slew of other thorny, year-end issues but isn't eyeing a full term.

"At this point, no," he said, adding, however, "I might catch the bug."

FRANCE

Syrian opposition leader gets honor

PARIS – France on Saturday welcomed a member of the Syrian opposition as the country's ambassador, a bold bid to confer legitimacy on the week-old opposition coalition and encourage other Western nations to follow suit.

The new envoy, Mounzir Makhous, appeared before the media after talks at France's presidential palace between President Francois Hollande and the head of the newly formed Syrian opposition coalition.

France has swiftly stepped out ahead of Western allies nearly since the start of the Syrian uprising 20 months ago.

Saturday's surprise announcement came even before the brand-new coalition has named its provisional government and before a place in Paris to house the envoy has been found.

Gay marriage plans prompt protest

PARIS – Groups opposed to President Francois Hollande's plans to legalize gay marriage and gay adoptions took to the streets Saturday across France.

Hollande said he would enact his "marriage for everyone" plan within a year of coming to power in May, but vocal opposition from religious leaders, some politicians and parts of rural France has divided the country.

Saturday's protest, called the "March for Everyone," included pro-family and Catholic groups. Several thousand people marched in Paris, carrying signs with slogans such as "One child (equals) one father + one mother."

IRELAND

Marchers mark woman's death

DUBLIN – About 10,000 people marched through Dublin and observed a minute's silence Saturday in memory of the Indian dentist who died of blood poisoning in an Irish hospital after being denied an abortion.

Marchers, many of them mothers and daughters walking side by side, chanted "Never again!" and held pictures of Savita Halappanavar as they paraded across the city to stage a nighttime candlelight vigil outside the office of Prime Minister Enda Kenny.

The 31-year-old, who was 17 weeks pregnant with her first child, died Oct. 28 one week after being hospitalized with severe pain at the start of a miscarriage.

CONGO

2 officers, 151 rebels killed in fighting

KINSHASA – U.N. attack helicopters targeted M23 rebels in eastern Congo on Saturday after fighting resumed following a monthslong lull in violence, a local official said.

Two army officers and 151 rebels were killed in a battle beginning Thursday that the United Nations called the worst clash between the M23 group and the military since July.

Attack helicopters for the U.N. mission in Congo, known as MONUSCO, had been on standby.

Train strikes Egyptian school bus; 51 people killed – mostly children

By Mamdouh Thabet and Aya Batrawy

ASSIUT, Egypt – A speeding train that crashed into a bus carrying Egyptian children to their kindergarten Saturday killed 51 and prompted a wave of anger against a government under mounting pressure to rectify the former regime's legacy of neglect.

The crash, which killed children between 4 and 6 years old and three adults, led to local protests and accusations from outraged Egyptians that President Mohammed Morsi is failing to deliver on the demands of last year's uprising for basic rights, dignity and social justice.

Children's body parts, their books, schoolbags and tiny socks were strewed along the tracks.

Um Ibrahim, a mother whose three children were on the bus, pulled her hair in grief. "My children! I didn't feed you before you left," she wailed in horror. A witness said the train pushed the bus along the tracks for nearly half a mile.

More than a dozen injured children were being treated in two different facilities, many with severed limbs and in critical condition.

Several hours after the accident, Morsi appeared on state television, promising an investigation and financial compensation for victims' families.

His transport minister and the head of Egypt's railways resigned.

"Those responsible for this accident will be held accountable," Morsi said.

The response, his critics say, comes too little too late.

For months, transport workers have been complaining about poor management and poor working conditions.

Saturday's accident falls exactly one week after two trains collided south of Cairo, killing four people.

While many train accidents in Egypt are blamed on an outdated system that relies heavily on switch operators instead of automated signaling, the high death toll and fact that nearly all those killed were young children likely will give ammunition to Morsi's critics who say he has done little to improve life for ordinary Egyptians.

Election shows how far nation has come

By Krista Larson

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone – Sierra Leoneans chose Saturday between keeping an incumbent president who has expanded health care and paved roads or electing an opposition candidate to lead this war-scarred nation still recovering a decade later despite its mineral riches.

The election marked the third presidential vote since the West African nation's 11-year conflict ended in 2002, a brutal war during which rebels tortured victims and conscripted child soldiers.

Voters said they wanted to demonstrate just how far Sierra Leone has come by holding a transparent and peaceful vote.

"We've been through a lot in the last 20 years. Now we're trying to move forward," said Mannah Kpukumu, 36, a civil servant waiting in a line that snaked near a giant cotton tree. "We the young guys want employment and to be able to take care of our families."

National election officials spread that message through posters affixed to tin shacks and traffic circles throughout the capital of Freetown: "The world is watching us. Let us don't disappoint them."

Richard Howitt, chief observer for the European Union election observation mission, said there were bound to be flaws in the process but that early reports indicated a high turnout Saturday.

"What we see is a very happy atmosphere with people enthusiastic to vote," he said.

Abe Lincoln played key role in town before taking office

By Tony Reid
Associated Press

LINCOLN, Ill. – Geoff Ladd, executive director of the Abraham Lincoln Tourism Bureau of Logan County, proudly points out that the seat of county government is in fact the only town actually named in honor of Honest Abe when he was a vertical man.

"It was named for him while he was still alive," emphasizes Ladd. "All the other Lincolns in the country were named post mortem."

It was on the hot day of Aug. 27, 1853, that Lincoln stood near the corner of what is now North Chicago and Broadway streets, snatched up a watermelon and expertly cut it open with his ever-handy pocket knife.

As an audience of prominent worthies looked on in the dust, Lincoln decanted the melon juice into a tin cup and then poured it onto the ground in what was described as a christening ceremony. Ladd says soaking a bit of the virgin dirt seemed about as good a choice as any, as it's hard to symbolically anoint a namesake city that had yet to be built.

The self-taught prairie lawyer, modest as ever, is said to have quipped: "Nothing with the name of Lincoln has ever amounted to much."

Lincoln the man now belongs to the ages, and Lincoln the town is all grown up. But the watermelon remains. Sort of. Its memory is enshrined in the form of a 28-inch-long steel and painted replica melon slice which rests atop a concrete plinth next to a big "Looking for Lincoln" information sign giving bemused passers-by all the juicy details. No one is absolutely sure, but this may very well be the only commemorative watermelon to be found above America's fruited plains, or anywhere else, for that matter.

So why name the place for Lincoln? All right, he was a prominent Illinois politician and attorney but, at the time, the presidency, emancipation, saving the Union and ultimate martyrdom for the people he loved all lay locked in a future none present could have predicted.

Ladd, who has a picture on his office wall of himself shaking hands with a smiling and, at the time, U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, says those destined for greatness give off a kind of vibe that makes your skin prickle.

"With Obama, you kind of got the feeling that this guy was going to be president one day," he said. "I bring it up because I kind of think that maybe that might have been the sentiment with Lincoln. I think even back in 1853, people were aware, they realized."

‘The Twilight Saga’ ends with real bite

By Christy Lemire
Associated Press

Review

Finally — finally! — the “Twilight” franchise embraces its own innate absurdity with the gleefully over-the-top conclusion, “The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn — Part 2.”

This is by far the best film in the series. This does not necessarily mean it’s good. But as it reaches its prolonged and wildly violent crescendo, it’s at least entertaining in a totally nutso way.

The first four adaptations of Stephenie Meyer’s mega-best sellers about the girl-vampire-werewolf love triangle (the final book was divided into two films for maximum box-office benefit) were, for the most part, laughably self-serious affairs full of mopey teen angst, stilted dialogue and cheesy special effects. Sure, they pleased their fervent audience, made billions of dollars worldwide and turned their three core actors into instant superstars. But they weren’t what you would call high-quality cinematic experiences.

Now, Bill Condon (who also directed last year’s “Breaking Dawn — Part 1”) finally lets his freak flag fly. Here is the Condon of “Gods and Monsters,” the one who loves lurid horror. Here is the Condon of “Dreamgirls,” the one with an eye for panache. His final “Twilight” movie dares to have a little fun — it actually makes you laugh intentionally for once, teetering on self-parody as it does.

Like something out of a telenovela, Condon cuts between characters standing around staring at each other, the dramatic score punctuating each piercing look. Maybe they’re reading each other’s minds, sharing visions of the future or shielding each other from harm. Maybe they just can’t think of anything to say.

Regardless, it’s all prelude for the massive showdown that awaits in the film’s second half. There have been teasers about a bold plot twist — and we wouldn’t dream of spoiling it here because watching it play out with a packed and rabid audience is a complete kick — but Condon and screenwriter Melissa Rosenberg have taken a big risk in deviating from the book, and it pays off big-time from a narrative perspective. It’s kind of amazing that this thing got a PG-13 rating.

First, though, “Breaking Dawn — Part 2” must pick up where part one ended.

No longer torn between two amorous, animalistic suitors, Bella (Kristen Stewart) has married vampire Edward (Robert Pattinson), produced his hybrid spawn and been turned into one of the undead herself to avoid actual death during childbirth. Now she gets to enjoy all the perks of living forever — unstoppable strength and speed, the thrill of hunting for fresh blood and a seemingly unlimited sex drive. (The visuals still look awfully clunky and fake, especially in these scenes where Edward and Bella are running and jumping through the forest. At least the werewolves have stopped talking to each other, though.)

And Stewart seems to be enjoying herself for the first time, too. She’s done away with the sulking and lip-biting and thrives within her newfound ferocious femininity. The swoony Edward almost feels like an afterthought here: This is Bella’s time to sparkle.

Jacob (Taylor Lautner), the childhood friend and werewolf who was competing for her affections in small-town Forks, Wash., is still around and he’s assumed a new role: He has “imprinted” on Bella’s newborn daughter, the hideously named Renesmee (Mackenzie Foy), which makes him her protector and lover for life. Yes, this is creepy, but at least the film acknowledges as much. “Breaking Dawn — Part 2” goofs on the famously ab-tacular Lautner by having him not just take his shirt off but strip down all the way to his underwear. Prepare yourself: The audience shrieks are deafening.

But the arrival of this beautiful child draws the suspicion and ire of the Volturi, the vampire elite living in Italy who ... I don’t know, govern over these kinds of things? Anyway, they view this half-human, half-vampire as a threat. The bloodsucking Cullen clan and Jacob and his wolfy buddies must band together to prevent an attack, and to prove that the girl’s rare existence should be treasured. They do this by traveling the world, gathering other vampires of various ethnicities to form a sort of United Nations of the undead who will vouch for her.

We are all Renesmee Cullen.

The gifted and versatile Michael Sheen unleashes the wonderfully weird performance we always knew was in him as Aro, the sinister leader of the Volturi. His high-pitched laugh alone is both hysterical and menacing. Meanwhile, Dakota Fanning as the powerful Volturi guard Jane maybe says one word during the entire movie, instead letting her intense, red eyes speak for her.

It’s a massive cast that feels even larger during the closing credits, which features a parade of seemingly every actor who’s ever appeared in a “Twilight” movie. (Hey, there’s Anna Kendrick! Oh yeah, and Bryce Dallas Howard!) It’s a classy and strangely melancholy send-off. Just as the “Twilight” series improves, it’s going away.

“The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn — Part 2,” a Summit Entertainment release, is rated PG-13 for sequences of violence including disturbing images, some sensuality and partial nudity. Running time: 115 minutes. Three stars out of four.

Funding runs low as first half of I-69 opens for travelers

The Associated Press

CRANE, Ind. – The nation's longest new highway in the works — a nearly $3 billion interstate to link rural southwestern Indiana with the state's capital — is now half-built and ready for traffic, but lingering questions of when the project's remaining miles will open and how they'll be paid for could cloud its future.

After four years of work, the first 67 miles of the Interstate 69 extension's planned 142 miles will open to cars and trucks Monday following a ribbon-cutting and a caravan Gov. Mitch Daniels will lead north along the newly paved stretch, which cost about $900 million.

Despite the questions about how many years it will be before the full Evansville-to-Indianapolis route opens, the highway's supporters in isolated southwest Indiana are excited and hopeful that even the 67 miles of four-lane, 70 mph traffic will invigorate the region's economy.

But for at least the next two years, cars and trucks driving onto the new highway near Evansville will slow and exit at a rural spot halfway to Indianapolis near the Crane Naval Surface Warfare Center about 25 miles southwest of Bloomington.

From that point, they'll continue on those familiar state roads with cross traffic and stoplights.

Daniels, whose second term ends in January, will leave office with his successor, Mike Pence, facing the task of completing and paying for the remainder of I-69 to Indianapolis because the funds Indiana tapped to pay for most of the highway's first half are nearly gone.

The state devoted about $700 million to the I-69 project from the $3.8 billion it collected by leasing the Indiana Toll Road to a private consortium. But that money has already been spent or allocated.

the American Red Cross trucks per day. It will be replaced by a North Carolina relief crew kitchen.

The Kramers do most of their work outside. That means wearing coats, hats, gloves and boots to keep warm in temperatures that have been in the 30s in the mornings.

"One day it was so foggy — we are just across the interstate from JFK airport — we couldn't see the planes coming," Kramer said. "We laughed and said we've had snow, rain, fog. We just haven't had hail."

Through it all, they've cooked up barbecue chicken, pork, rice, vegetables, chicken dumplings, cookies and pound cake, among other things.

They've also given displaced residents snacks like chips, as well as fruit.

The meals are then delivered by the American Red Cross, sometimes to places like a Wal-Mart parking lot.

While the Kramers haven't had much direct contact with the New York residents who have lost their homes, they have gotten a lot of support from the people living near Aquaduct.

"People have just embraced us," Kramer said. "The night it was snowing, we went out and talked to the people, and they are so appreciative of us coming to help."

Meanwhile, the Kramers and the crew of roughly 150 volunteers (the numbers change each day) who are preparing food each day sleep at a Filipino Baptist church on cots and in sleeping bags.

"We are staying in a church that's about three miles from where we are actually doing our cooking," she said Friday. "And we are just spread all over this church. They have graciously allowed us ... we have cots all over the sanctuary, the fellowship hall, Sunday school rooms, everywhere."

The Kramers and others have also had a lot of help from the New York Police Department, which volunteered to take the relief workers on a bus to the church and back to Aquaduct.

"They have been awesome," she said. "Every day they would pick us up at the church and they would drop us back at night."

Up until Friday, about 150 different disaster relief volunteers through the Southern Baptist Convention had worked with the Kramers at the Aquaduct kitchen.

Meals are delivered starting around 11 a.m. up until around 4 p.m. The highest number of meals delivered in one day was 18,850, she said.

"I know they are covering the Queens area, but some just go to places where people can go who have lost their housing," Kramer said, referring to community centers.

She said the Red Cross gives her crews a number of meals to prepare each day. The numbers tend to go up on the weekends, she said, because people are not at work.

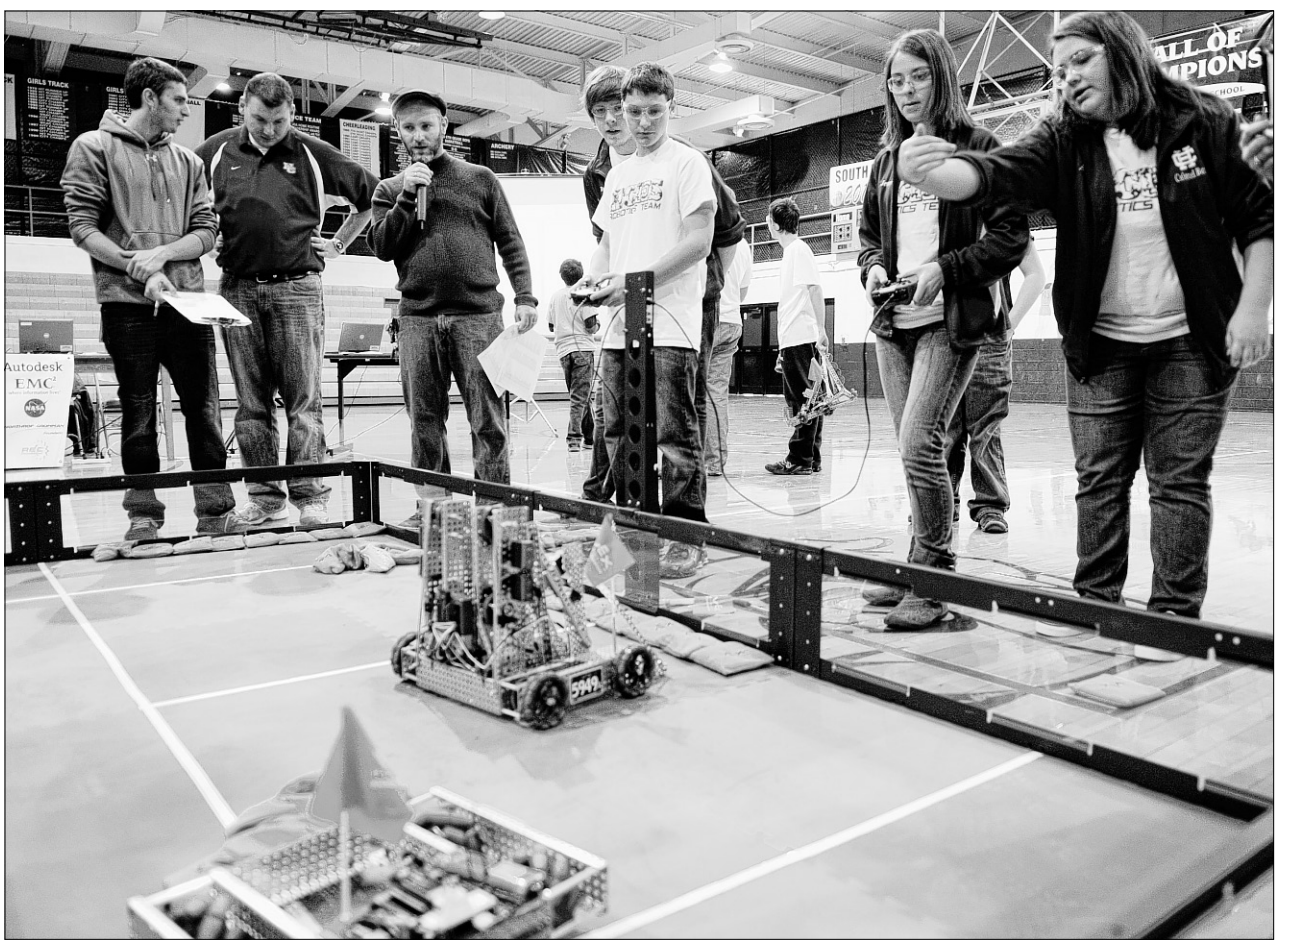

Additionally, many untrained volunteers from Queens have come in to work in the pot and pan washing area and to move snacks onto trucks.

"You just feel blessed that God has laid upon your heart to do this," Kramer said. "You get such a blessing from knowing that you are serving others."

four team members and now we have 13."

The robotics team helps the students "use their imagination and critical thinking skills. There's no end to what they can do ... The girls like it just as much as the guys," Waggener said.

Katie Wilson, 15, an HCHS sophomore, became interested in robotics during an eighth-grade engineering class.

"I liked it," she said. "Right now it's a hobby, but I'd like to be a mechanical engineer and there's robotics in that. So having prior knowledge will help."

Wilson said she assisted with programming the robots used during Saturday's competition. So did Jenny Pike, 16, also a sophomore. This is Pike's second year as a team member.

"It sounded like fun," she said, adding that what she enjoys the most is programming the robots.

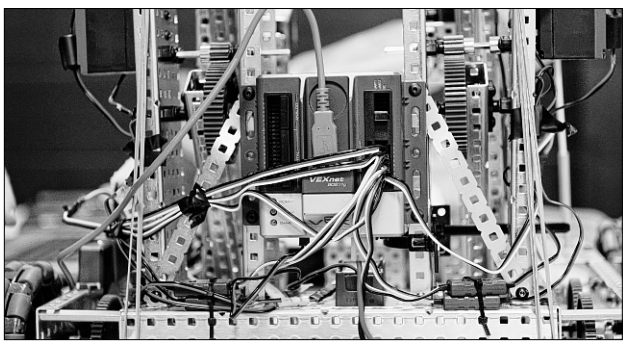

"Jenny drives too," said Wilson, as Pike took her place at the square-shaped area designated as the competition site.

Tanner Goins, 14, a freshman at county high, is trying his hand at building the robots. He said the competitions give the team a glimpse of some other options they have in designing and programming.

"We observe them and see what ideas work and what doesn't. Then we try to see how we can make our robots perform better."

Henderson County High School VEX team members Jenny Pike, left, and Ashlyn Smith react as they control one of the robots in the competition at South Middle School on Saturday.

Alex Owens, 15, a sophomore, said he is enjoying his first year on the robotics team.

"I like the competitions," he said. "This is our first one, and we have at least two more planned."

Among the reasons he likes participating, Owens said, is "I'm very competitive, and a lot of my friends are involved so it's a great way to socialize."

Owens said before joining the team, "I didn't really know a lot about robotics. I've learned programming and teamwork and how to build a robot.

"It's fun," he said. "I like problem solving."

SCRIPPS HOWARD NEWS SERVICE

During a training exercise, Drug Enforcement Administration agents demonstrate the highly combustible nature of cooking meth. Dr. Michael Smock, director of the burn center at Mercy Hospital in St. Louis, says he has watched the types of burns change as the popularity of the "one-pot" method of cooking meth has increased. Gone wrong, the process can turn a plastic soda bottle into a flamethrower. About 15 percent of Smock's patients are injured in meth lab fires and most have no insurance.

METH from 1A

an illegal drug made mostly in rural labs to a business increasingly run by Mexican drug cartels through a sophisticated urban distribution system infiltrating most major U.S. cities.

Now 80 percent of the meth on American streets comes from Mexico, smuggled over the Southwest border dissolved in water, windshield wiper fluid or beer or hiding in fruit or produce, according to the DEA.

The Justice Department's 2011 National Drug Threat Assessment reported that four Mexican drug trafficking organizations, commonly known as cartels, were most involved: Sinaloa, Tijuana, La Familia Michoacana (LFM) and Beltran-Leyva.

Southwest border seizures of meth totaled 7,338 kilograms in 2011, more than twice the amount seized in 2009.

"We've seen a big uptick in seizures of methamphetamine," says John Horn, first assistant U.S. attorney in the Northern District of Georgia. "It has supplanted coke as the main drug imported in the last year — both in liquid form, where they take it to processing labs, and also 'dirty' meth or brown meth that they wash and make into ice (a clear, rocklike form of the drug)."

Rachael sums it up: "The cartels have the market cornered in Dallas."

Evidence analyzed at DEA laboratories shows that from July 2007 through September 2010, the price per gram of meth decreased 60.9 percent, from $270.10 to $105.49, while the purity increased 114.1 percent, from 39 percent to 83 percent. The caveat: Often meth is diluted as it works its way down the chain of dealers before being sold at street level.

"Mexican ice (meth) has been stepped on and cut so many times it's just not at the purity of what a local meth cook would turn out," says Detective Charles Teeters of the Memphis, Tenn., Police Department's Organized Crime Unit.

This creates opportunity for people like "Kevin," the Aryan Nations member who lives in Tipton County just north of Memphis. His name is not being used because it might make him the target of rival drug dealers. In his neck of the woods, home-brew meth typically goes for about $50 a gram.

All Kevin needs is a 2-liter plastic soda bottle, or even a 20-ounce plastic bottle, to cook a small amount of meth in what is commonly termed the "one-pot" or "shake-and-bake" method. He conceivably could cook anywhere, but he prefers the woods behind his parents' small crooked house — slanted ceilings, uneven floors, his mother sitting on an old couch rolling her own cigarettes — or in a back bedroom where his newlywed wife's 4-year-old daughter sleeps.

"With 30 bucks (for ingredients), you can make a couple hundred bucks of meth," Kevin says, adding that he doesn't feel bad about cooking and selling. "The way I look at it, people were either gonna come get it from me or from somebody else."

Some, but not all of the ingredients required to make meth in a one-pot cook include: pseudoephedrine (PSE), the key chemical found in many cold and allergy medications; ammonium nitrate, found in cold packs; camp fuel, a common naphtha-based fuel used in lanterns; metal lithium and salt. It's often said that cooking meth this way, which can be done in less than an hour, is as easy as baking cookies. But Kevin, who claims he made A's in high school science class, says it is imperfect chemistry. On a late summer morning, Kevin sits in his family's kitchen, where dirty dishes cover the counters and stovetop. He has a shaved head and is shirtless, wearing sleep pants covered in little devils and hearts. "My wife got them for me on my honeymoon," he says.

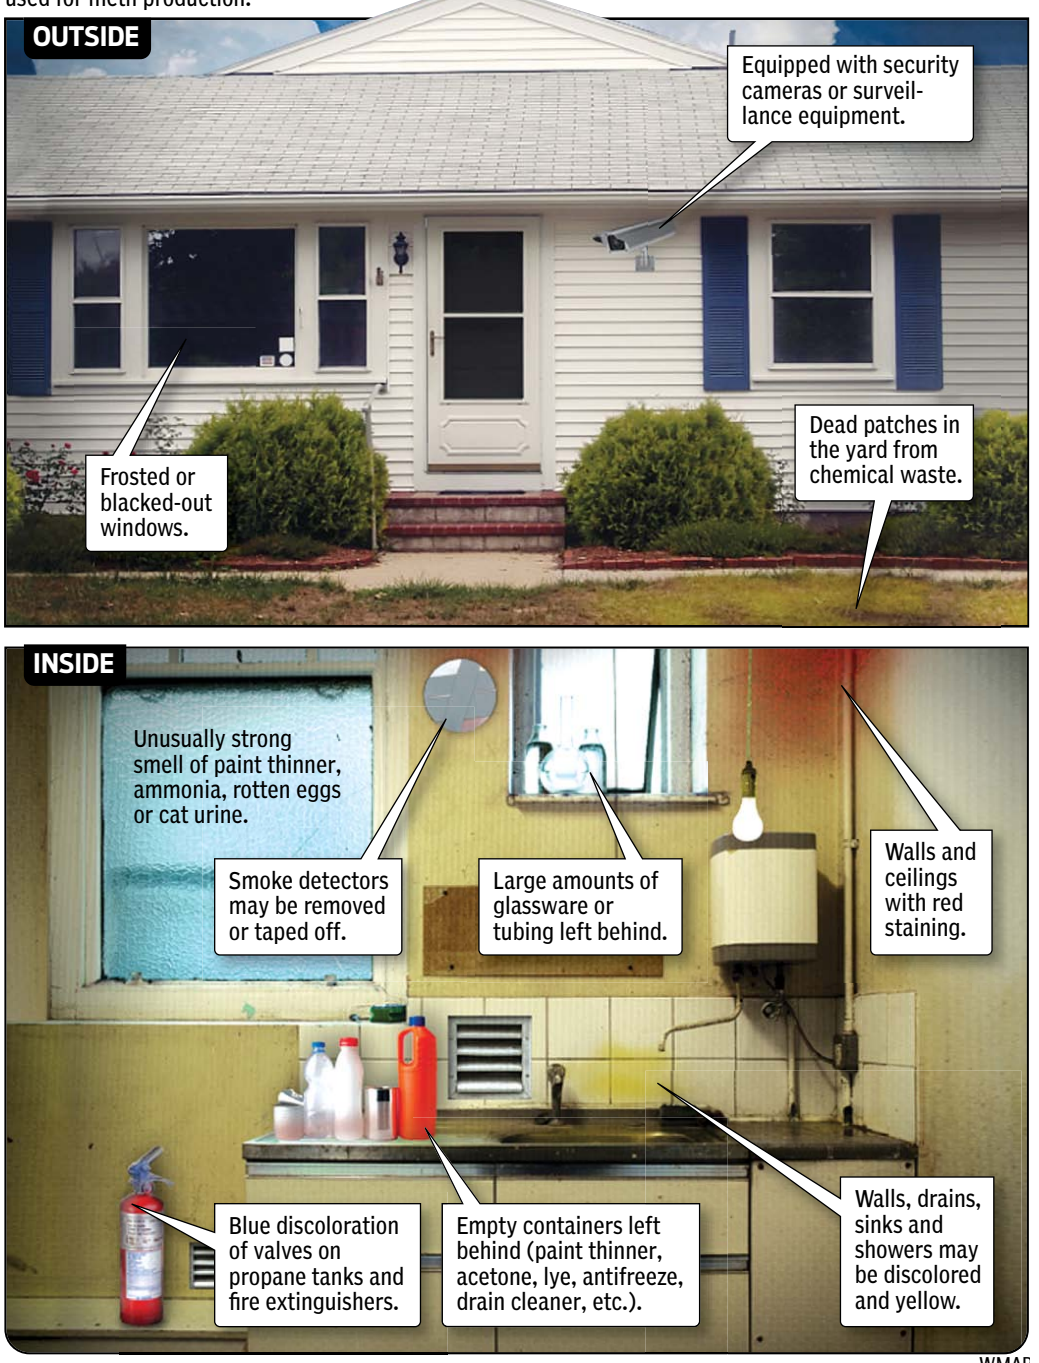

He explains that moisture or air temperature can affect the outcome of a particular meth batch, a theory confirmed by University of Oklahoma professor of chemistry Donna Nelson. Nelson also serves as consultant for the cable-TV show "Breaking Bad," in which a high school science teacher and a former student cook and sell meth.

"As a chemist, the idea of putting so many things with so many impurities in your body ... I cringe at that," says Nelson, whose academic research is funded by the National Institutes of Health.

Kevin only cringes at the thought of his cooking process failing: "Sometimes it'll be good; sometimes it'll be bad. Sometimes, you don't even get meth. It's a hope recipe."

METH HOUSE

Signs that a house may have been used for meth production.

WMAR

The original meth recipe came from Japan. Methamphetamine was synthesized into crystal form from ephedrine by Akira Ogata, a Japanese chemist, in 1919. During World War II meth was given to Kamikaze pilots to fight fatigue and boost courage. Later, meth became popular with outlaw motorcycle gangs on the West Coast, including the Hells Angels, earning the nickname "crank" because bikers would transport it in their crankcases.

Those who have spent the most time studying America's meth problem — its many faces, its many layers, its many victims — are past hoping that the drug can be eradicated.

The National Survey on Drug Use and Health shows the roller-coaster nature of meth use. It reports the rate of persons 12 or older initiating meth use increased more than 60 percent between 2008 (95,000) and 2009 (154,000) then dropped in 2010 (105,000).

But "it's never going away," says Jane Maxwell, senior research scientist for the Center for Social Work at the University of Texas and who is engaged in a study of 222 meth addicts. "It's whack-a-mole."

The federal government took its whack with the 2005 Combat Methamphetamine Epidemic Act, which requires all products containing pseudoephedrine to be placed behind a sales counter and retailers to maintain a logbook of PSE purchases. Two states — Oregon in 2006 and Mississippi in 2010 — went farther by passing laws requiring a prescription for PSE.

Joy Krieger, executive director of the Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America, St. Louis chapter, says prescription laws put an unnecessary burden on consumers and that products containing PSE are vital to people seeking an effective decongestant.

"I want pseudoephedrine," says Krieger. "It will keep you open. It is the medicine of choice."

This year, at least 16 states pursued PSE-prescription legislation. All failed.

Kentucky, the first state to use NPLEx, an electronic system that tracks PSE sales so pharmacies and law enforcement can see when someone is at the legal purchase limit in a 30-day period, was a battleground state. A trade group representing the over-the-counter drug industry, the Consumer Healthcare Products Association, spent $486,053 on lobbying in Kentucky to defeat the prescription legislation.

About $18 billion is spent per year on nonprescription medicine. That money, and the lobbying money, is telling, says Rob Bovett, a district attorney in Lincoln County, Ore., and a driving force behind the state's prescription law.

"It's not just chump change," Bovett says. "It's the cost of doing business."

Like many in law enforcement, Tennessee Meth Task Force Director Tommy Farmer says tracking PSE sales doesn't work.

"We don't have a problem finding meth labs," Farmer says, noting that Tennessee was among the nation's leaders in 2011 with 1,130 meth lab incidents. "We have a problem stopping them."

In 2011, 10,287 meth lab incidents were reported nationwide — up 39 percent from 2008; the number includes recovery of hazardous materials left behind. One reason tracking doesn't work, Farmer and others say, is the practice of "smurfing," in which people use fake IDs or get others to purchase the products containing PSE for them. Street gangs, such as the Bloods and Crips, have started to become involved, too.

Sometimes, the smurfer looks less like someone who would be involved with meth and more like someone who actually bakes cookies. One day in Memphis, Detective Teeters arrested Linda Clark, a 60-year-old grandmother from Jonesboro, Ark. During the past two years NPLEx shows she has made 38 purchases of products containing PSE in Tennessee — a pattern that allows him to charge her with the promotion of manufacturing methamphetamine, a felony. Standing outside the detective's unmarked SUV on a downtown sidewalk, her sunglasses pushed up on her dyed-red hair, Clark begins to cry as she says she has been selling the blister packs she bought for around $10 to meth cooks for $50.

"I just need the money," she says. Others are desperate for the meth rush. Nick Reding, author of "Methland," which chronicled meth abuse in a small Iowa town, tells one story about a 37-year-old man who "blew himself up in a lab fire." After three months in a hospital burn unit, after "losing most of his fingers and quite a bit of his face," as Reding puts it, the man returned to smoking and cooking meth.

Dr. Michael Smock, director of the burn center at Mercy Hospital in St. Louis, practices in the state that consistently leads the country in meth lab incidents (Missouri had 2,058 last year). He has watched the nature of burns change with the highly combustible one-pot method, which gone wrong can turn a plastic soda bottle into a flamethrower. One thing, however, has stayed the same: about 15 percent of his patients are injured in meth lab fires and most have no insurance. One patient who spent more than 100 days in the burn unit ran up a bill of more than $1 million.

The DEA's Scott has viewed the meth problem from just about every angle.

"At the 30,000-foot level, the federal level, the preponderance of meth is Mexican meth," he says. But he's also been on ground level and has seen flesh melting off people in lab fires and the toxic sludge and societal waste left behind for others to clean up.

"I worked in California, on the border in Arizona, in Kentucky, and in all those places I found meth labs to be the most difficult to deal with investigative-wise and every other way," Scott says.

The agent pauses, as though still weary: "If I never did another meth lab it'd be a day too soon."

■ According to the National Admissions to Substance Abuse Treatment Services data from 2000-10, admission to long-term rehab for methamphetamine/amphetamine use outnumbered admissions for all other drugs combined (17 percent vs. 8 percent).

Breaking good is hard to do

■ Meth users often end up in justice system

By Don Wade

SCRIPPS HOWARD NEWS SERVICE

Meth's ultimate power over users who become abusers is indisputable.

From Hollywood actors to lawyers, from race car drivers and minor league baseball players to children of pastors, from surfers to teachers ... from any walk of life you care to name, methamphetamine has found its takers, its so-called tweekers.

"I can equate it to my habit of choice — chewing tobacco," says Nick Reding, best-selling author of "Methland: The Death and Life of an American Small Town."

Reding spent time over four years in Oelwein, Iowa, population 6,415, studying the pervasiveness of meth.

"We live in a country and a world where drugs are very acceptable," he says. "Alcohol's a drug and acceptable, right?"

Methamphetamine, obviously, has not reached alcohol's level of acceptance. Highly addictive and restricted, the drug can be prescribed to treat obesity and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. But the illegal form sold on the street has found multiple niches in American society and there is enough general understanding about the drug — gets you way high, may rot out your teeth, can literally keep you awake for days — that it's even a subject for comics.

"I did this TV show at 3 in the morning," comedian Mo Mandel says in a stand-up routine. "The booker would not let me tell the meth joke. He said he wanted the show to be appropriate for children as young as 7. I was like, 'If a 7-year-old's watching TV at 3 in the morning, the meth joke will work.' "

AMC's "Breaking Bad" is in its fifth season on cable TV and has a cult following. Its main character is a high school chemistry teacher named Walter White who, after receiving an advanced-stage cancer diagnosis, turns to making and selling meth with a former student. In one episode, his young sidekick marvels at the purity of the meth Walt has made and calls him a "(bleeping) artist."

Donna Nelson, a professor of chemistry at the University of Oklahoma and "Breaking Bad's" science consultant, watched several episodes before coming on board. She wanted to make sure the program did not portray making and using meth as attractive. She believes it doesn't, but as a chemist, with funding from the National Institutes of Health, she thinks the show does something for her chosen branch of science.

"You see (Walter) taking pride in his work, although his work is a little different," Nelson says. "But he's happy to create a good product."

The product's ultimate power over users who become abusers is indisputable. According to the National Admissions to Substance Abuse Treatment Services data from 2000-10, primary admissions to receive long-term rehabilitation/residential treatment due to methamphetamine or amphetamine use outnumbered admissions for all other drugs combined (17 percent vs. 8 percent).

Alison Watros, 43, who now runs a drug-treatment center for women in Texas, recalls the final days of her meth addiction: "I was so tired; I had a pipe in one hand and a hamburger in the other."

Breaking good, so to say — ending the cycle of addiction — is extremely difficult and often complicated by the fact that 52 percent of all those admitted for treatment were referred by the criminal justice system (that's vs. 37 percent of those who had a different primary drug of abuse).

Nick Taylor, a clinical psychologist in Montrose, Colo., about 300 miles southwest of Denver, was a founder and the clinical director of a meth treatment/drug court program in Delta County from 2006-09. Participants who successfully complete the program receive a deferred sentence.

"The client has to identify the 10 people in their life they have to get away from to stop using," Taylor says. "And the judge says, 'If I hear you've been around this person, you're gonna spend three days in jail.' That's tricky if they're married to each other."

Jane Maxwell, a senior research scientist at the Center for Social Work at the University of Texas, understands well that meth is easily available — both from the Mexican cartels and from enterprising "meth cooks," who with the main precursor pseudoephedrine (found in cold and allergy medicines) and a few household products can whip up a batch of meth in a 20-ounce plastic bottle anywhere.

Maxwell is studying 222 meth addicts. She believes she may be on to a social/environmental precursor: "They're much more likely to have been abused and neglected as children and adults than heroin users."

The Meth Project (methproject.org) launched an advertising campaign in Montana in 2005 aimed at teenagers. Over the years, the campaign has expanded. Several Hollywood directors, including Darren Aronofsky ("Black Swan," "The Fountain"), have assisted with the project, making shocking and graphic ads about the drug's dangers.

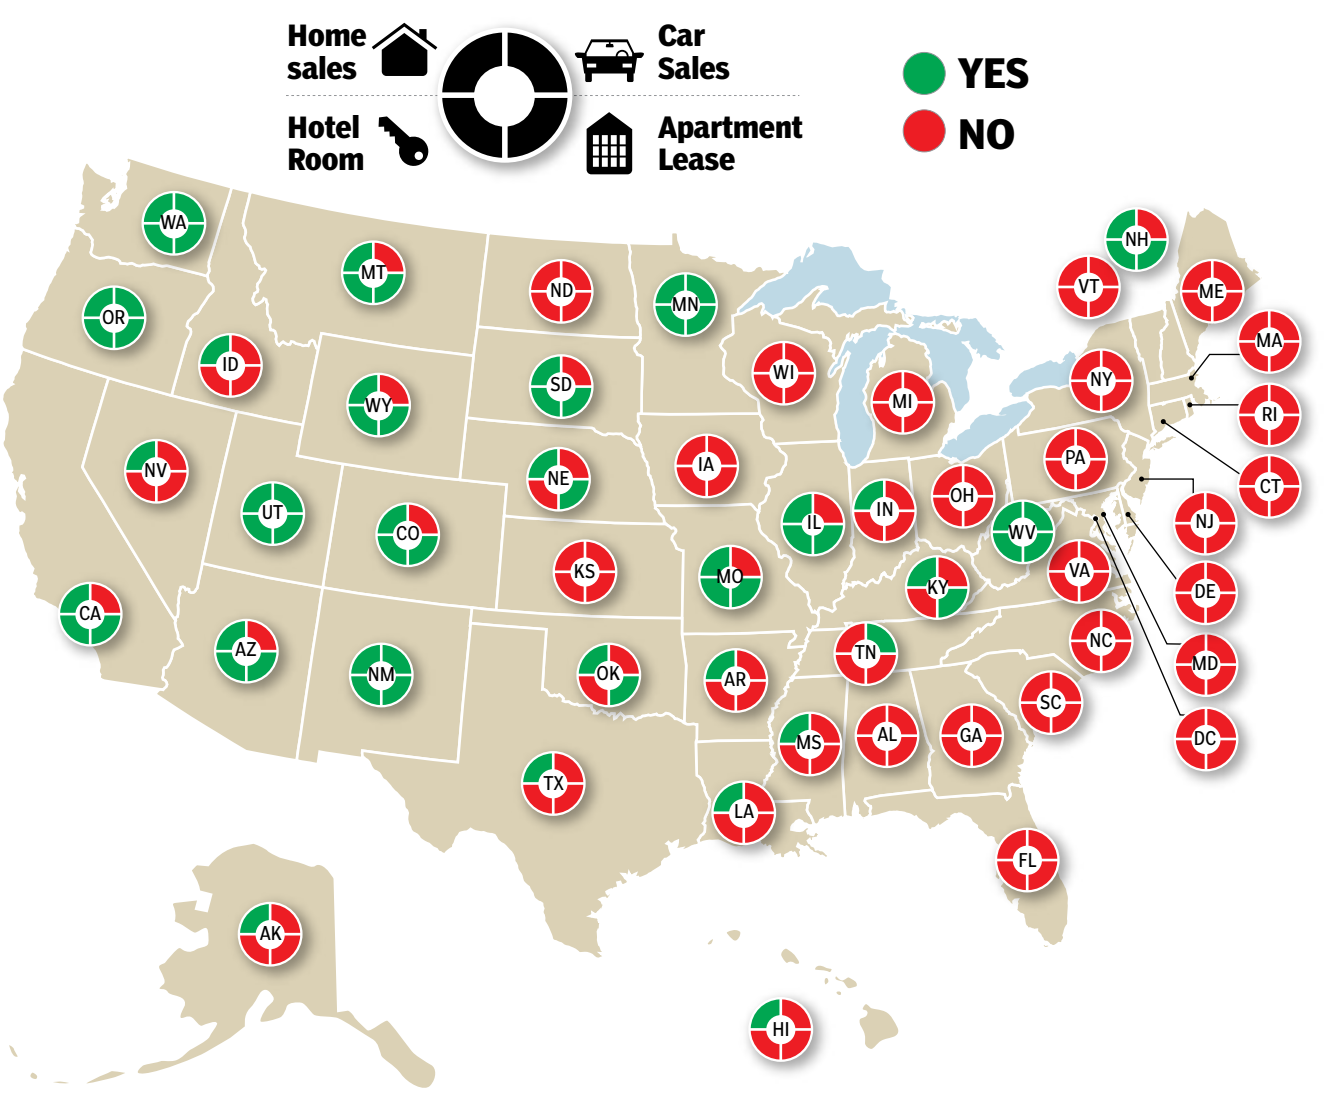

The goal? The same as it was in the beginning, says Meth Project Executive Director Jennifer Stagnaro. "Unsell meth."

BREAKING BAD NEWS:
Meth-contamination disclosure laws state by state

Scripps Howard News Service examined state laws across the country, looking for those specifically requiring home sellers, landlords, car sellers and hotel owners to disclose meth contamination to prospective buyers and renters. Only 28 states compel home sellers or real estate agents to tell buyers of previous meth contamination. Just 17 states mandate landlords tell tenants, and only 14 states make hotels disclose contamination. In several states if meth damage has been cleaned up, or "remediated," no disclosure is required. In 42 states car sellers do not have to tell buyers about possible meth residue in the vehicle.

$50 for a meth test and when the results from the lab came back they discovered the home had a contamination level almost 80 times greater than permissible under Oregon law.

"With all these foreclosures coming on the market, it's sort of like land mines," Hankins says.

From 1999 to 2011, the Drug Enforcement Administration reported uncovering 21,000 residential meth labs. Their addresses are documented in the agency's aptly named Clandestine Drug Lab Registry (http://www.justice.gov/dea/clan-lab/index.shtml).

An analysis of state laws by Scripps Howard News Service found that Oregon is one of 28 states with a specific meth disclosure law pertaining to the purchase of a home. In several other states, once the property has been cleaned up, or "remediated," the owner does not have to tell a buyer about meth contamination. Only 17 states have meth-specific laws requiring landlords to disclose meth contamination to tenants. And when you move from the house to the driveway, car sellers in 42 states don't have to tell buyers about potential meth residue.

Freddie Mac spokesman Brad German said in a statement the lender knew nothing of the Hankins' house's meth history: "The Hankins family chose to forgo a home inspection or any other environmental test and bought the home in 'as-is' condition."

Hankins agrees he waived the inspection. He also points out that a meth test is not part of an Oregon home inspection. He hasn't hired a professional to decontaminate his house because he was told it would cost more than the house was worth. Now Hankins may have the house torn down and the property excavated.

In any case, there is division of opinion among experts on the degree to which any contaminated home can be rehabbed, how much it should cost, and even how much meth exposure is truly harmful.

What matters, says Caoimhin P. Connell, a forensic industrial hygienist in Bailey, Colo., is if the meth left behind rises to a level of "toxicological significance," adding, "Give me a squad car, a courtroom, a stack of hundred dollar bills, and I can get meth off all of them."

In Utah, the state says that 1.0 micrograms per 100 square centimeters is the level of toxicological significance. Oregon uses a different standard — 0.5 micrograms per square foot — which roughly equates to .05 micrograms per 100 square centimeters. Hankins said his sampling showed a contamination level of 38 micrograms.

"One microgram is roughly the volume of a grain of salt and 100 square centimeters is roughly the size of your palm," says Garth Haslem, a Utah certified decontamination specialist who says he can clean up a 2,000 square-foot house with minor contamination for $3,000 to $4,000.

Haslem believes meth contamination fears are overdone, adding, "I have a daughter looking for a house and I want one with warts — especially meth because that's one of my strengths and we're looking for a big discount."

Patrick Berge, a program specialist with the Nebraska Department of Environmental Quality, spent several years as a grad assistant at the University of Tennessee cooking meth in a laboratory setting.

"Even with a controlled cook, you still get meth everywhere," Berge says.

Ask Berge if he would ever consider buying a home that had been meth-contaminated and then later cleaned and declared safe, he laughs for several seconds and says, "No. I would not buy a property that had a meth cook on it. Not even one."

Even smoking meth leaves a residue. For his own "academic amusement," Connell did tests on five rooms while staying in a cheap Tulsa, Okla. motel on business. All tested positive for meth, although only one had significant levels. The Scripps analysis of state laws showed just 14 states requiring hotels to disclose meth contamination.

Through website Change.org, which promotes social change by petitions, Hankins is expressing his frustration with Freddie Mac. Still, he's not bitter.

"It's an ugly situation," he says, "but we feel blessed we got out when we did."

cal of the compassion that keeps the volunteer-staffed soup kitchen in operation.

We also see that trait in deer hunters who are participating in the 12-year-old Kentucky Hunters for the Hungry, Inc.

These males and females donate thousands and thousands of pounds of deer meat to non-profit agencies such as the Salvation Army, which not only uses it in ground form mixed with ground beef for spaghetti, chili and other dishes, but also — when there's enough — provides packages of it to those who have applied for food assistance.

The venison is processed by state-approved butcheries in Union and Webster counties.

Major Peggy Mullins of the Salvation Army here said last week that the meat is a blessing, because "Meat has become a scarcity for us." The soup kitchen numbers have steadily grown (with more than 200 people coming for a hot meal on some days last summer), and more meat is needed for that serving line.

Consequently, there often has been little meat to give to those who are receiving food staples for their families at home.

Peggy, an immensely likable person who quickly makes you feel you've known her forever, pointed out that the Salvation Army relies heavily on local food drives.

One of the last things the late Dr. Gaynor Howell did prior to his recent death was deliver barrels to Henderson County schools for the canned food drive that took place last week.

Food comes from other sources, too, such as the Tri-State Food Bank located in Evansville.

MIKE LAWRENCE/THE GLEANER

Salvation Army volunteer Don Robards stops filling drinks to hand a napkin to one of the diners at Friday's noon meal.

For those who count on the soup kitchen for sustenance, every day is a form of Thanksgiving.

And Thanksgiving Day is expected to see plenty of diners who are in need or have no family dinner to attend.

Many will come to the Salvation Army center at 1213 Washington Street in Henderson, (no reservation is needed), but those who are unable to get to the facility can call the center in advance at 270-826-4472 and arrange to have a big hot meal delivered to their home.

That latter service brings up the subject of volunteers. The agency is fortunate to have many of those dedicated souls, but more are needed to deliver the Thanksgiving meals. Anyone who can do so is asked to call the above phone number and enlist.

Like the regular soup kitchen, the Thanksgiving meal will be served at the center from 11 a.m. until 12:30 p.m.

Peggy recalls that last year, 100 pounds of potatoes were peeled, and there was enough prepared food to deliver two containers of turkey and all the trimmings to each of the shut-ins.

Thanksgiving 2011 also saw a church youth group volunteering to come in and clean up after the feast.

"That," said Peggy, "was really nice."

Hint, hint.

Those of us who are fortunate enough not to have to worry about where our next meal is coming from are shocked to learn that one in every four children in Kentucky is living in poverty, and in some counties as many as 55 percent of youngsters are living in poverty.

Thank God for the agencies that work so hard to help feed our citizens of all ages. They include Christian Community Outreach and numerous active church programs. Of course, they can't do it without our help.

product, King said.

"When it became law that people have to show an I.D. and can only purchase so many grams of medicine containing ephedrine and pseudoephedrine a month, that at first held meth makers in check," he said.

"Now, they've figured out how to get around this by what's called Smurfing. Smurfing is basically when the main cook gets several of his friends and their goal is to go out and purchase so many packages of medicine containing ephedrine and pseudoephedrine and bring back to the (meth maker) or Papa Smurf to cook," King said.

In addition, he said, meth labs have become more mobile.

"They're smaller and compact and people can take them anywhere and make meth anywhere," he said.

King said he also attributes the rise in meth lab numbers to an increase in addicts.

"I think there are more addicts out there," he said.

Henderson County Sheriff's Detective Bill Mills said the face of the meth trade has changed and even increased since it was introduced to the area more than 15 years ago.

"Meth makers have gone from Nazi labs in houses to Shake N' Bake labs they can (create) in a 2-liter (soft drink) bottle," he said. "Where (making meth) used to take hours, it now takes 45 minutes."

With the "Nazi" chemist-type labs, an explosion would "take the house out," Mills said. "Now the labs are in your hands ... it's going to take out the person holding the labs."

With the newer methods to make meth, "they could have 100 Shake N' Bake labs going in a house," he said. "This is worse for the safety of officers."

"We're losing (the battle)," he said. "And it's going to get tougher. Heroin is making its way in (to the county), and people are mixing heroin and meth and making (drug) cocktails. So all the bad things meth does, add heroin to that."

Henderson Police Detective Preston Herndon recalled that the first time he saw a meth lab was in the early part of 1999.

"For months before that, we were dealing with people under the influence of meth, but at that time, we had very little training to know how to deal with people on meth and what they're going through," he said.

"To illustrate how little we knew at the time, it was decided that officers should come to the scenes of meth labs and get a good smell (of the chemicals) to know what it smelled like," Herndon said. "Nobody knew" how dangerous the chemicals are.

"The first time I dealt with a meth lab, I had no idea what I'd found. It was an anhydrous mobile meth lab," Herndon said. "Not only had I not ever seen one, I never thought I'd ever see one ... I wasn't prepared for what would happen. I didn't know the dangers involved.

"The learning curve on how we dealt with meth and how people react while taking it was somewhat slow," Herndon said. "And things we dealt with when it first moved in (to Henderson) was, by today's standards, dangerous.

"But our early experiences taught us to get training to be more prepared to deal with the trends involved in meth making and meth usage."

King said when meth began to make its way into Western Kentucky, "I remember being shocked by the chemicals people put in their bodies. I never understood how people would tear their families apart for this."

After attending training about the drug, he said he learned that meth releases dopamine levels in the brain of roughly 1,050. Dopamine is a chemical in the brain which is a precursor for adrenaline.

King said to put this into context, nicotine releases dopamine levels measured at 225; a favorite food releases a level of 150; and sexual intercourse releases a dopamine level of 200.

"There's nothing you can do to duplicate that feeling," he said. "It's no surprise (addicts) pursue it."

Mills said when meth took off in Henderson County, he recalls a time when "we worked nine labs in 11 days."

At that time, he said, "I thought this is going to be some bad stuff."

Kentucky romps 34-3 in Phillips' home finale

By Gary Graves

JAMES CRISP/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kentucky's Demarco Robinson, left, escapes the grasp of Samford's Durell Hill during the first quarter of their game at Commonwealth Stadium in Lexington on Saturday night. The Wildcats rolled to a 34-3 victory over the Bulldogs.

LEXINGTON – Freshman Jalen Whitlow passed for one touchdown and ran for another, Raymond Sanders rushed for a career-high 123 yards and a TD and Kentucky blew out Samford 34-3 Saturday night to end an eight-game losing streak.

The Wildcats (2-9) scored their highest point total since beating Kent State 47-14 on Sept. 8. Kentucky's skid led to the Nov. 4 firing of coach Joker Phillips, who will finish the season on Saturday at Tennessee.

Whitlow completed 10 of 13 passes for 66 yards and an 11-yard touchdown to senior wide receiver Gene McCaskill. He also rushed for a 20-yard touchdown and finished with 59 yards on seven carries.

Sanders rushed for a 14-yard touchdown that made it 24-3. Tristian Johnson followed with a 25-yard fumble return for a touchdown.

Kentucky, which scored on six of its first eight drives, outgained Samford 455-102 including 342 rushing compared to minus-2 for Samford.

Dyshawn Mobley rushed for 82 yards on 16 carries and Jonathan George added 76 on 17 attempts.

Craig McIntosh kicked field goals of 35 and 43 yards as Kentucky won its third straight home finale.

Cameron Yaw's 41-yard field goal provided the only points for Samford (7-4).

To put Kentucky's win in perspective, consider these numbers:

The Wildcats' 31 first-half points alone were their most since a 32-31 overtime loss to Western Kentucky that started their skid.

Kentucky's 266 first-half yards were six more than it totaled in a 40-0 loss to Vanderbilt here two weeks ago, the breaking point leading to Phillips' firing the next day.

Even more impressive, the Wildcats held Bulldogs running back Fabian Truss to just 37 yards a week after he rushed for a career-high 219 against Elon. And they hadn't held an opponent below 200 yards since limiting Akron to 172 on Sept. 18, 2010.

It didn't matter that Kentucky was facing Football Championship Subdivision member Samford for the first time. After going winless for more than two months the Wildcats were just desperate for a victory and the Bulldogs entered the game on a two-game winning streak.

Sentiment also drove Kentucky, which honored 19 seniors in a pregame ceremony. Though their presence has been somewhat overshadowed this season by 46 freshmen and sophomores playing substantial minutes, the underclassmen wanted to make sure the veterans' home finale was memorable.

That feeling extended to Phillips, who chose to coach Kentucky' final two games but stressed all week that he didn't want to be a distraction on a night devoted to his departing players.

McCaskill made his case for Kentucky's seniors on the opening drive.

He capped a 14-play, 69-yard drive by pulling in Whitlow's 11-yard pass for a touchdown that set the tone for a performance last seen against Kent State.

Buckeyes are still perfect

Ineligible Ohio State edges Wisconsin 21-14 in overtime to improve record to 11-0

Ohio State running back Carlos Hyde scores the game-winning touchdown against Wisconsin in overtime on Saturday in Madison, Wis. Ohio State won 21-14 to improve to 11-0.

MADISON, Wis. – Ohio State clinched one title, and kept its slim hopes for another alive.

The sixth-ranked Buckeyes won the Leaders Division crown outright Saturday, beating Wisconsin 21-14 on Carlos Hyde's 2-yard scoring run in overtime. Buckeyes safety Christian Bryant batted down Curt Phillips' pass on fourth down to preserve the win.

Ohio State (11-0, 7-0 Big Ten) is ineligible for the postseason as part of its punishment for NCAA violations under former coach Jim Tressel. The best the Buckeyes can hope for is to finish the regular-season unbeaten, then have the teams above them all lose at least once to give them a shot at playing spoiler for The Associated Press title.

"We have a saying, 'A team that refuses to be beat won't be beat,'" Ohio State coach Urban Meyer said. "Somehow, someway."

Wisconsin, meanwhile, blew its chance to show it deserves its spot in next month's Big Ten title game. The Badgers (7-4, 4-3) are third in the Leaders Division, but they'll be playing for a trip to the Rose Bowl because neither the Buckeyes nor Penn State are eligible for the postseason. No one else in the division will even finish with a winning record.

"I'm sure winning in Indy and going to the Rose Bowl and winning there would erase all the losses we've had," Montee Ball said. "Because that's our goal."

At least the Wisconsin fans got to see Ball get the major college record for career touchdowns in his final home game. Or, part of the record anyway. Ball scored his 78th TD in the second quarter, tying the mark set by Travis Prentice of Miami (Ohio) in 1999.

But he fumbled what would have been the record-breaker with 2:46 left in regulation. Ball held the ball in front of him as he leaped over the pile on the goal line, and Buckeyes linebacker Ryan Shazier met him with both fists and punched the ball loose.

"That's a dumb decision on my part," Ball said. "But I just felt like I needed to get the ball in the end zone."

And the Buckeyes felt just as strongly that they needed to keep him out.

"We knew that he needed two to break the record," Shazier said. "We were not going to allow him to break it on us."

Ball finished with 191 yards on a career-high 39 carries.

The Ohio State-Wisconsin rivalry hasn't reached the heights of "The Game" between the Buckeyes and Michigan. But it is not exactly warm and fuzzy, either, especially not after the previous two games.

Two years ago, Wisconsin ended Ohio State's hopes of a making a run at the national title, handing the then-No. 1 Buckeyes their first loss at Camp Randall. (Ohio State's 2010 season was later erased by the NCAA sanctions.) Last year it was the Buckeyes stunning the Badgers, with Braxton Miller dancing around like a jitterbug before launching a 40-yard, game-winning heave with 20 seconds left.

Though there wasn't any obvious chippiness Saturday, the brutal physicality of the game left no doubt the teams have begun to use each other as a measure. Wisconsin's defense was downright nasty, limiting the high-powered Buckeyes to a mere 236 yards of offense, more than 200 yards below their average. The Buckeyes crossed the midfield only once after halftime, and the Badgers largely kept the dynamic Miller in check.

Notre Dame wallops Wake to stay unbeaten

By Tom Coyne
Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. – Everett Golson threw touchdown passes of 50, 34 and 2 yards, Cierre Wood scored on a 68-yard run and third-ranked Notre Dame beat Wake Forest 38-0 Saturday to finish the season undefeated at home for the first time since 1998 and keep its national championship hopes alive.

The Fighting Irish improved to 11-0 for the first time since 1989 and need to beat Southern California to finish a regular season undefeated for the first time since 1988, the last time they won a national championship. The Demon Deacons (5-6) fell to 1-33 all-time against top 5 teams.

The victory virtually assures the Irish of a berth in a BCS game. The Irish need to beat USC and likely need either No. 1 Oregon or No. 2 Kansas State to lose to slip into the BCS title game.

But Notre Dame players and coaches have said all along they are focused only on what they can control, and on Saturday they were in total control of Wake Forest. The Irish hadn't scored more than 20 points at home in regulation all season, but had 31 points at halftime behind Golson's 317 yards passing — which was 28 yards more than the season-high he had against Purdue.

Fourteen of Golson's 17 first-half completions led to first downs. Golson finished with 346 yards on 20 of 30 passing with one interception. Wood rushed for 150 yards on 11 carries and Tyler Eifert had six catches, giving him 130 for his career, breaking the school record of 128 set by Ken MacAfee in 1977.

The Irish dominated on both sides of the ball, outgaining the Deacons 584 yards to 209. It was the first shutout for the Irish since a 35-0 win over Nevada in the season-opener in 2009 and their first shutout against a major conference team since a 42-0 victory over Rutgers in 2002.

Tanner Price was 22 of 33 passing for 153 yards for Wake Forest with his longest pass for 16 yards.

We learned a lot during the heady days of fall

As we catch our breath between sports seasons, it's a good time to reflect on what we learned during the heady days of fall.

Advancing to their second straight state Final Four, the Henderson County Colonels cemented their status as one of Kentucky's finest soccer programs.

Their season ended in a tightly-contested 2-0 loss to the Lexington Dunbar Bulldogs, who had the advantage of playing on their own home field.

Dunbar went on to drop a narrow 1-0 decision to St. Xavier in the championship game.

After surrendering two first-half goals, the Colonels looked just as good as the Bulldogs and maybe even better. Logic says Henderson County could've competed with the champs too.

The best team won the state title but the Colonels proved they belonged with the best. They've got a lot of talent coming back next year, so a third straight Final Four would be a reasonable goal.

Though standing in the shadow of a great boys program, Henderson's soccer girls made significant strides too.

Things finally fell into place for coach Doc DeWitt and his Lady Colonels. They looked 10 times better at the end of the season than they did at the beginning.

In volleyball, the young Lady Colonels went 34-6 and advanced to the state tournament.

Hit hard by graduation and breaking in a rookie head coach, they weren't supposed to be this good. Not yet anyhow.

Now they're primed for something special in 2013. Next year's squad will be loaded with veteran seniors and bolstered by up-and-coming youngsters.

As usual, the football Colonels put together another fine season. Finishing with a 9-3 record, they lost only twice to Kentucky teams.

The second loss — a 21-17 heartbreaker against Louisville Eastern — ended their season in the second round of the playoffs.

Eastern came back the next week and rolled to a 19-point win over 9-3 Louisville Ballard.

So Henderson lost to a good team and, with a couple less turnovers, it could've been the Colonels making that deep postseason run.

In major league baseball, we learned that the National League is much better than the American.

Before sweeping Detroit in a ho-hum World Series, the San Francisco Giants struggled mightily against Cincinnati and St. Louis in the N.L. playoffs.

The Reds had them down 2-0 in a best-of-five series, while the Cardinals owned a 3-1 lead in a best-of-seven.

Opponents better watch out for Cincy and St. Louis in 2013.

Keselowski has Penske closing in on title

NASCAR Chase will be decided in today's finale

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

J PAT CARTER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Driver Brad Keselowski looks at his car as his crew makes adjustments during a practice session for Sunday's NASCAR Sprint Cup race at the Homestead-Miami Speedway.

HOMESTEAD, Fla. – It had been a humbling 24 hours of championship racing for Roger Penske when he settled in for the plane ride back to Detroit.

His heart had been broken in California, where Will Power coughed away the IndyCar title by crashing out of the season finale. The disappointed team owner then made his way to Chicago for the opening race of NASCAR's 10-race championship series, where Penske driver Brad Keselowski stole a surprise win over five-time champion Jimmie Johnson.

It was a tremendous emotional swing for Penske, who said to no one in particular on that flight home, "Well, we raced with the big boys today. And we won."

"That really struck me when he said that, because Fontana was the lowest of the lows, a tough night," said Walt Czarnecki, a Penske executive for more than 40 years. "To come back the next day and win Chicago with Brad, it was such a turning point for Roger. He was energized to race with the big boys, and to beat them. And to do it after losing Fontana with Will. It helped."

Penske, the most successful team owner in open-wheel history, has little to show 40 years after entering NASCAR. Keselowski, the 28-year-old blue collar antiestablishment Michigan native, could change that for "The Captain" — just as he promised in a passionate speech to Penske four years ago.

Keselowski takes a 20-point lead over Johnson into Sunday's season finale at Homestead-Miami Speedway, where a finish of 15th or better will give Penske his first Sprint Cup title. It would have been his first ever NASCAR championship if Keselowski hadn't won him a second-tier Nationwide title in 2010 — his first season with Penske Racing.

These are the trophies Keselowski vowed to deliver when he reached out to Penske in 2008.

He was driving for JR Motorsports in the Nationwide Series and locked into a developmental deal with Hendrick Motorsports, but didn't see a Cup ride opening anytime soon. So he asked Penske what he had available, even though Penske Racing wasn't exactly the dream destination for NASCAR talent.

Penske has won 23 national championships in and 15 Indianapolis 500s, and his passion and his focus are usually directed on the open wheel part of the motorsports program. Although his NASCAR organization had 61 wins before Keselowski arrived, it only contended for a championship once — in 1993 when Rusty Wallace won 10 races and still finished second to Dale Earnhardt.

■ Brad Keselowski got some help on the last day of practice for NASCAR's Sprint Cup season finale at Homestead-Miami Speedway.

Pole sitter Joey Logano was involved in a three-car accident during the first of two practice sessions Saturday, switched to a backup car and will start from the rear of the field Sunday.

That will move Keselowski, who had qualified third, to the front when the green flag drops Sunday. Marcos Ambrose will start on the outside.

And if Keselowski leads the first lap, he will extend his points lead from 20 to 21 in the 400-mile race. He needs to finish 15th or better to clinch the title, which would be the first for longtime NASCAR team owner Roger Penske.

"I certainly wasn't expecting to be on the front row," Keselowski said. "It's different from what we're used to, but it's different in a good way. ... If I can take the lead without wrecking myself, then that's what I'm going to do."

Keselowski seemed a little tighter than usual Saturday, quite possibly starting to feel the pressure as he goes for his first championship.

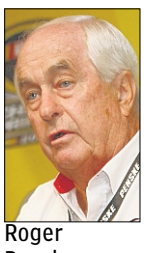

Fellow title contender Jimmie Johnson, who will start 10th in the finale, has done all he can to make Keselowski feel uncomfortable.

"Ready to race for sure," Johnson said. "Very pleased with how our car finished up. It's really nothing for me to lose sleep about tonight. It's an easy night for me. ... Easy from my standpoint because I've got nothing to lose. We'll see what they do on the other side."

■ Nationwide: Ricky Stenhouse Jr. is the sixth driver to win consecutive championships in NASCAR's Nationwide Series.

Stenhouse finished sixth Saturday in the season finale at Homestead-Miami Speedway, edging Elliott Sadler for the title.

About the only drama in the race was whether Stenhouse would play it safe. He did, but not without several close calls. His Roush Fenway Racing team even had to remind him several times in the final 10 laps to avoid potential pitfalls.

Roger Penske

Regan Smith won the 400-mile race. Kyle Busch was second, followed by Brandan Gaughan, Sam Hornish Jr. and Austin Dillon.

Smith did some smoky burnouts, then headed to Victory Lane. But Stenhouse had dibs on the bigger celebration.

Stenhouse became the first since Martin Truex Jr. in 2005 to win back-to-back titles in the second-tier series.

■ Richard Petty Motorsports has re-signed Sprint Cup Series drivers Marcos Ambrose and Aric Almirola for the 2013 season.

It will be Ambrose's third season at RPM. He will again be behind the wheel of the No. 9 Ford. It will be Almirola's second season in the No. 43 Ford.

Choi shoots 69 for lead at Titleholders

Wire reports

U.S. Women's Open champion Na Yeon Choi was steady after a careless three-putt bogey early in her third round Saturday at the Titleholders and finished with a 3-under 69 to take a one-shot lead into the final round of the LPGA Tour season.

Choi limited her mistakes, even as those around her were dropping shots in a tough wind at TwinEagles.

Ai Miyazato quickly gave up her one-shot lead at the start of the round when a chip rolled back to her feet beyond the par-5 second hole and led to double bogey.

Choi hit a hybrid 5-wood to 15 feet for birdie on the par-3 17th and closed with a two-putt for par to reach 12-under 204. That gave her a one-shot advantage over Miyazato, who made four birdies on the back nine and salvaged a 71. So Yeon Ryu, the LPGA rookie of the year and one of Choi's best friends, ran off four straight birdies on the front nine before cooling off for a 66. She was two behind.

■ Hong Kong Open: Spain's Miguel Angel Jimenez shot a 2-under 68 for a share of the Hong Kong Open lead with New Zealand's Michael Campbell.

Campbell had a 69 to match the 48-year-old Jimenez, the 2005 and 2008 winner, at 10 under. Italy's Matteo Manassero, coming off a playoff victory in the Singapore Open, was a stroke back along with China's Zhang Lian-wei.

■ Australian Masters: Defending champion Ian Poulter shot an 8-under 64 to take a one-stroke lead over Adam Scott after the third round of the Australian Masters.

■ South African Open: Sweden's Henrik Stenson closed in on his first European Tour victory in three years Saturday, shooting a 3-under 69 to take a three-stroke lead into the final round of the South African Open.

■ Pebble Beach Invitational: Robert Streb shot a 3-under 69 in rainy conditions at Del Monte to take a one-stroke lead over Billy Horschel after the third round in the Pebble Beach Invitational.

Manning gets grief for ungainly slide

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Denver Broncos' Peyton Manning (18) looks for an open receiver against the Carolina Panthers as he scrambles during the first half of an NFL football game in Charlotte, N.C., Sunday. The Broncos won 36-14.

Peyton Manning has caught a lot of grief for his ungainliness at Carolina last Sunday when he didn't kick his cleats up high enough on a feet-first slide after a 6-yard scramble.

His left cleat got stuck in the grass and he rolled awkwardly to the ground in the second quarter of Denver's 36-14 win over the Panthers.

Linemen Manny Ramirez and Orlando Franklin, tight end Jacob Tamme and running back Ronnie Hillman surrounded him immediately. But their concern was quickly assuaged when Manning bounced up, straightened out his left knee brace and returned to the huddle.

Whew!

It was something they all had a good laugh over later on.

As the seconds ticked away, rookie cornerback Omar Bolden sat on the bench next to Manning and told the four-time MVP, "You know, after we get this 'dub,' we're talking about that slide."

"I hear ya," Manning replied. "Fair game."

Manning said he caught plenty of guff from teammates.

"It's not even worth explaining what happened. It looked bad, and the fact that my knee brace got caught, nobody wants to hear that," Manning said. "It is what it is, as they say, and it's right there on film. I'm very aware that it's fair game for criticism and ridicule. I have plenty thick enough skin to handle it."

Wilson tuned out on Thursday night

George Wilson has no issue playing an occasional game on Thursday night. Just don't ask the Buffalo Bills safety if he's ever watched any of the weeknight, primetime games since the NFL made it a regular part of its schedule.

"I don't have the NFL Network," he said days before Buffalo's victory against Miami on Thursday night. "So this is all new to me."

Wilson explained that his cable provider, Time-Warner, didn't carry the NFL Network. He then said he wasn't aware when informed the NFL reached a deal two months ago to have Time-Warner carry the network.

"Well, obviously, it must cost extra to get it, because it's not in your normal cable package, so I don't have it," he said.

Wilson, the Bills' NFL Players Association representative, can understand the reason the league has made Thursday night games a mainstay despite the short break players have between games.

"The league is trying to boost its viewership and commercial opportunities," Wilson said. "It's tough, but this is what we signed up for."

Arkansas team shut out 88-0

An Arkansas girls high school basketball team was shut out 88-0 last week by a team whose coach pulled her starters in the first few minutes and told her players to take it easy.

Little Rock Hall High beat J.A. Fair High on Monday night in the Little Rock Girls Basketball Invitational Tournament.

Hall coach Selita Farr says she knew Fair's inexperienced team would have difficulty when the two played. Hall has eight seniors, including two being recruited by Division I colleges. Fair has four freshmen and one senior.

Farr pulled her starters early and says she told her team to "play soft." Fair missed four free throws and an uncontested layup near the end of the game.

Fair coach Shirley Goodnight could not be reached for comment.

Making the calls

■ Officiating gaffes more noticeable this year

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press

ASSOCIATED PRESS

San Francisco 49ers head coach Jim Harbaugh, right, talks with referee Walt Anderson (66) during the second half of an NFL football game against the Seattle Seahawks in San Francisco earlier this year.

As a Pittsburgh Steelers fan left the Meadowlands two weeks ago, he raised his right hand — a Terrible Towel in it, naturally — and loudly asked: "Who brought back the replacements?"

And his team won.

No, NFL officiating hasn't sunk back to the level of the first three weeks of the season, when the usual referees, umpires and linesmen were locked out in a contract dispute. The calls by the replacements were so inconsistent and, at times, so inexplicable that officiating began overshadowing game results. The quality of the product on the field was diminished by the lack of quality among the whistleblowers, none of whom came from the highest ranks of officiating.

The regulars' return in Week 4 was celebrated by players, coaches and fans alike.

The celebrating has ceased.

Instead, we hear complaints about blown calls, inadvertent whistles and hard-to-explain video review decisions.

We hear one referee cursing after unwittingly leaving his microphone open. We have the league admitting after the fact that several calls were incorrect.

And we have game announcers, whether on regional or national broadcasts, steadily criticizing the officiating.

While admitting it is impossible to have perfection in officiating, or anything else, NFL executive vice president of football operations Ray Anderson praises the officials for doing "a very good overall job."

"There are always going to be some shortcomings, these are humans making the calls and it has always been that way, `' Anderson said. "We work on those things, such as the announcements, and we are not overly concerned about their performance."

What about the unprecedented attention being paid to the officiating?

"Certainly one of the effects of the lockout was the scrutiny on officials and officiating," Anderson said. "It became an all-time high and, frankly, once the regular officials came back, we and they anticipated it would be at a higher level than ever experienced."

Some would say the officials aren't thriving under the attention.

On Nov. 4, Carolina running back DeAngelo Williams swept right and ran for a 30-yard touchdown, using some nice footwork to stay inbounds. Trailing the play, line judge Thomas Symonette blew his whistle because he mistakenly thought Williams stepped out of bounds.

Williams kept running all the way to the end zone and officials signaled a touchdown. Some Redskins complained they heard a whistle: linebacker Perry Riley, who might have had a shot at pushing Williams out of bounds, clearly eased up.

The officials conferred and again ruled a touchdown. Referee Carl Cheffers said they decided the whistle wasn't blown until Williams reached the end zone, but audio on the replay told a different story. The sound of the whistle is heard when Williams is at about the 15-yard line.

The next day, the NFL released a statement saying the crew got it wrong. Symonette's inadvertent whistle should have stopped the play dead at the 17, where he thought Williams stepped out of bounds. Alternately, Carolina could have also chosen to replay the down at the 30.

"They had to admit that, even if they didn't want to," Redskins coach Mike Shanahan said of the mistake. "I didn't know it was that bad until I looked at the film. That was an obvious mistake."

Another such error occurred last Sunday in Denver's win at Carolina, and the league acknowledged so the next day.

The NFL said Trindon Holliday's 76-yard punt return against the Panthers should have been ruled a touchback and not a touchdown. TV replays showed the ball coming out of his right hand just before he reached the goal line and then bouncing out of the end zone.

Replay official Bob Boylston confirmed the touchdown, so referee Alberto Riveron did not stop the game for a replay review.

"Actually it happened last week, too, and I thought I was actually in the end zone this time, but they told me I wasn't," said Holliday, who had a 105-yard kickoff TD return in Cincinnati two weeks ago.

Now, Denver coach John Fox has implemented the Holiday Rule, and the returner must bring the ball to the sideline and hand it to special teams coach Jeff Rodgers.

Procedural issues have cropped up, too — something the NFL expected with the replacements, even placing a supervisor in the replay booth; those supervisors no longer are there. Nor is an eighth official, who served as, if you will, a replacement for the replacements and traveled with those crews in case he was needed to step in.

During last Sunday's tie between the Rams and 49ers, there was a runoff of 1 minute, 12 seconds when the clock was never stopped during a measurement. It ran from 13:32 to 12:20, then was wound properly for the next play. But 7 seconds later, it was stopped to see if an error had been made.

Referee Clete Blakeman announced, "We're checking the game clock for accuracy." After another delay, Blakeman said: "The clock was correct and it's fourth-and-short."

Blakeman also made an incorrect announcement at the overtime coin flip, saying both teams would get a possession. That only is guaranteed if the team with the first possession of overtime kicks a field goal.

On Monday, the NFL acknowledged the clock error.

Wrong announcements pale in comparison to what happened at the Dolphins-Colts game on Nov. 4, when referee Tony Corrente cursed while officials were discussing a penalty. The crowd in Lucas Oil Stadium heard it, as well as a subsequent verbal indiscretion, which also made it onto the TV broadcast.

CBS announcer Kevin Harlan immediately apologized to his audience.

"What you want to do is make sure (officials) are handling all duties and that includes the microphone," Anderson explained, stopping short of saying whether officials are fined for blatant goofs. "We look internally for their grading and it could have an impact. Is it a potential discipline transgression? We don't announce what those are publicly; people are held accountable."

Impact of injured QBs depends on the team

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press

When quarterbacks get hurt for also-rans like the Eagles, it's an opportunity to see what the younger guys can do. When the injured QBs are stars such as Ben Roethlisberger, and they play for contenders, it's a whole other situation — and not often a pleasant one.

Michael Vick's concussion will sideline him Sunday at Washington, and that's unfortunate for the Philadelphia starter, of course. But in the next-man-in NFL, third-round draft pick Nick Foles also will get a chance to show if he is the Eagles' future at the critical position.

The scenario is entirely different in Chicago, San Francisco and Pittsburgh, where one man's injury could potentially wreck a team's playoff aspirations.

The Eagles (3-6) can afford to take a look at Foles. Barring a stunning turnaround, they won't come close to making the playoffs, and they've given no indication their dysfunction offensively, defensively and organizationally is going to disappear.

Vick has been a turnover machine, as much the cause of Philadelphia's flop as anyone. If Andy Reid's job as coach is on the line, as most everyone looking from the outside seems to believe, Vick doesn't seem capable of saving it. So why not go with Foles?

"I have a lot of confidence in him. That's why we brought him here," Reid said. "He's confident in his ability. If it comes down to where he has that opportunity, I think he'd be excited and (with) his personality type, it would be more of a positive than it would be a negative. I think he's wired that way."

And because the Eagles almost certainly won't chase a playoff berth down to the wire, the switch from Vick to Foles wouldn't be too painful.

The Bears, Niners and, especially, the Steelers, have more at stake.

Chicago already has learned a bitter lesson, going from 7-3 in 2011 to 8-8 and out of the postseason after Jay Cutler went down and Caleb Hanie failed as his replacement. That collapse contributed mightily to general manager Jerry Angelo's ouster, and the new regime immediately addressed the void by bringing in Jason Campbell, who has a history as a starter and far better credentials than Hanie.

With Green Bay breathing down the Bears' necks, they need for Campbell to come through Monday night at Candlestick Park, and perhaps beyond that, if Cutler can't go.

"We felt like we needed to improve our backup quarterback position in the offseason and feel real good about convincing Jason to be Jay's backup," coach Lovie Smith said. "He has been very good in the limited time we have given him."

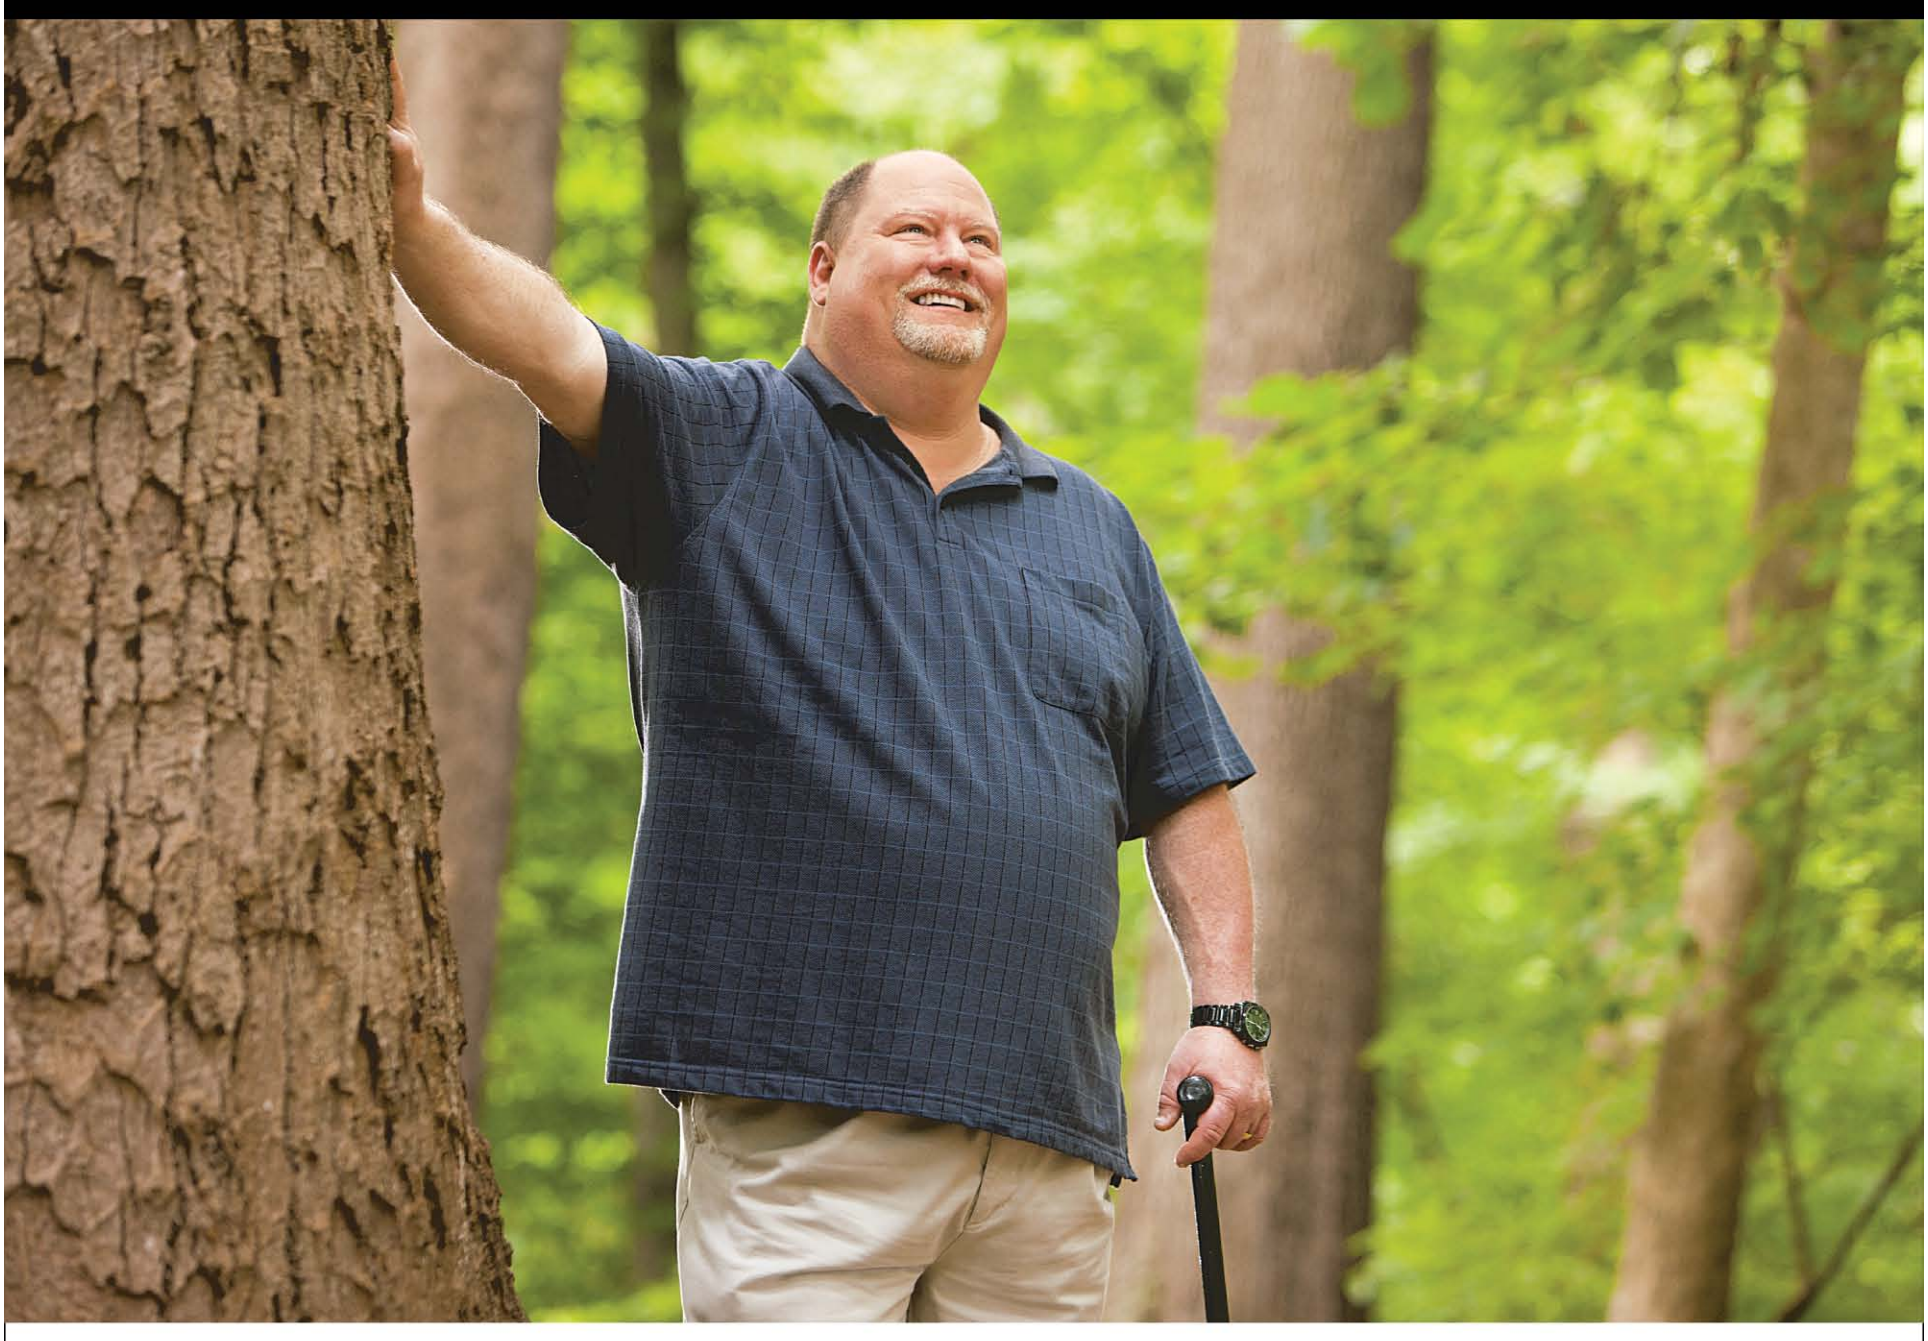

Campbell's potential counterpart Monday night, Colin Kaepernick, barely has a pro resume. In his second NFL season, Kaepernick has completed 16 of 26 passes in 2012 and rushed for 177 yards and three touchdowns. Last year, with Alex Smith taking nearly every snap, Kaepernick barely got onto the field.

Smith certainly could be the starter against Chicago, but if he isn't, the 49ers can't afford to give Kaepernick any learning curve.

The Steelers always come to play regardless of their injury list. Now comes the biggest challenge, and the timing couldn't have been worse for Pittsburgh. Roethlisberger has shoulder and rib injuries, and division leader/archrival Baltimore is up next, and then again in two more weeks.

We'll hear all kinds of brave words out of the Steel City about Byron Leftwich stepping in, and having a veteran with a solid knowledge of the offense and a bazooka for an arm is a positive for sure. But remember how often Roethlisberger has been the difference between beating out the Ravens in the AFC North — or eliminating them in the playoffs.

When that chronic wound heals,

ADVANCED WOUND HEALING

David Crawford's chronic foot wound is much improved. So is his outlook on life.

"IT'S VERY SCARY when a wound won't heal," says David Crawford. "You stop doing things you want to do, even simple things, for fear you'll hurt yourself worse."

David, a diabetic, should know. After unsuccessful therapies at other facilities, he had begun to lose hope that his chronic foot wound could ever be helped. But then he discovered the Advanced Wound Healing Center, newly opened at Methodist Hospital.

"We want to jump-start these wounds into healing," says nurse Crystal Shanks. The Center features progressive technologies, including the area's only hyperbaric oxygen chambers. The pressurized oxygen encourages the body's natural healing processes. After multiple treatments, David's wound is responding well. "I have never experienced care that comes close," he says.

Vintage Peyton a problem for rest of NFL

■ Chargers get daunting task of facing Manning today

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press

BOB LEVERONE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Denver Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning (18) looks to pass against the Carolina Panthers during the first half of their NFL game in Charlotte, N.C., on Sunday, Nov. 11.

The NFL is beginning to see vintage Peyton Manning, which is bad news for every team except the Denver Broncos.

It's especially daunting for the Chargers, who blew a 24-0 halftime lead at home to the Broncos a month ago and visit Denver on Sunday.

A Broncos win would be their fifth straight and would give them a three-game lead in the AFC West. It also could provide some more milestones for Manning in his 15th pro season and his first in Denver.

With one more touchdown pass, Manning would pass Dan Marino; both have 420, trailing Brett Favre's 508. He's completed 70 percent of his passes in six consecutive games, already an NFL mark.

Most importantly to Manning would be getting his 148th career victory, which would break a tie with Marino and deadlock him with his current boss, John Elway.

"I don't speak to the streaks or what's going on, all I know is, it's a division game, it's a team that, obviously, the Broncos have a lot of familiarity with," said Manning, whose comeback from neck surgery that sidelined him last season has been spectacular.

"It's a longtime rivalry. NFL players have a lot of pride. I know when a team beats us the first time, a team that has beaten us, I know I'll want to get another shot at them, and so we know they're going to be ready to play."

■ Indianapolis at New England: Now that Manning is performing his wonders in the Mile High City, this rivalry appeared to lose steam. Then Andrew Luck and the Colts broke loose, winning four straight to establish themselves as wild-card contenders. Pretty neat for a club that went 2-14 in 2011, earning the top overall draft pick that was spent on Luck.

Considering how many holes New England's defense has shown — it ranks 25th overall, 29th against the pass, and has surrendered at least 24 points five times — Luck might look like Manning at Foxborough.

Despite that leaky defense, the Patriots are running away with the AFC East. Tom Brady, Rob Gronkowski, Wes Welker and Stevan Ridley on offense are why.

■ Baltimore at Pittsburgh: The Steelers have a way of rallying the troops when stars go down, something the defense has done with Troy Polamalu sidelined for weeks with a calf problem. Now it's Ben Roethlisberger who is out with shoulder and rib injuries — at the worst time, with two games against the AFC North leaders in the next three weeks.

Byron Leftwich steps in, with another veteran, Charlie Batch, in reserve.

Baltimore's D often has been dominant, but not this season. Still, the Ravens are in good shape for the playoff run.

■ Chicago at San Francisco: ESPN must have been salivating for a matchup between two NFC favorites with physical defenses, outstanding runners and the inside track on division titles.

Instead, the network might get backup QBs Jason Campbell, in for Chicago's Jay Cutler, and Colin Kaepernick, replacing San Francisco's Alex Smith. Both starters were concussed in last week's games.

Regardless of who takes the snaps, this figures to come down to which of these intimidating defenses imposes its will on the opposing offense. Don't look for a lot of points at Candlestick Park.

■ Arizona at Atlanta: Spinning out of control with five straight losses, the Cardinals got a week off. They return — to face a ticked-off bunch of Falcons, who lost in New Orleans to spoil their perfect record.

Atlanta uncharacteristically butchered scoring chances late in the loss to the Saints. It's also struggling running the ball.

■ Green Bay at Detroit: Fresh from a bye, the Packers still have injury issues, with star linebacker Clay Matthews (hamstring) out Sunday and starting tackle Bryan Bulaga gone for the season with a hip injury. DB Charles Woodson and WR Greg Jennings still are out.

Yet the Pack is favored, in great part because the Lions are so unreliable.

No one has a tougher stretch run than the Lions, who now have three successive home games: Houston on Thanksgiving, followed by Indianapolis.

■ Jacksonville at Houston: Biggest mismatch of the weekend. Make that biggest mismatch of the season.

Both teams showed their mettle last week. The Texans did it by out-hitting the Bears in the rain and wind at Soldier Field, knocking Cutler from the game in the process. The Jaguars did it by showing they aren't close to being ready for prime time in a 27-10 loss to Indianapolis.

■ Tampa Bay at Carolina: With four wins in five weeks, the Bucs are now playoff contenders. Josh Freeman has become one of the NFL's most dangerous passers, rookie Doug Martin has been sensational running the ball, and the receiving tandem of Vincent Jackson and Mike Williams has broken out.

■ New Orleans at Oakland: The Saints are stoked, believing they are on a spurt to the playoffs after an 0-4 start. Coming off handing archrival Atlanta its first defeat, New Orleans can't afford to stumble here with the 49ers, Falcons, Giants and Bucs ahead on the schedule.

■ Philadelphia at Washington: A rookie QB who most of the time has been sensational likely will take on a first-year signal-caller getting a chance because the veteran starter is concussed. Washington's Robert Griffin III certainly seems to have the edge over Nick Foles.

■ Cincinnati at Kansas City: The Bengals put together their best effort of the season in manhandling the Giants, and now they begin a tour through the mediocre AFC West (minus Denver, which has already beaten them) by facing the Chiefs, Raiders and Chargers.

■ Cleveland at Dallas: Dallas has begun thinking about a revival that will lift it back into the NFC playoff picture, and with matchups against the Browns, Redskins and Eagles at home just ahead, the Cowboys could become relevant again.

■ N.Y. Jets at St. Louis: The skill positions could spell the difference here. St. Louis has the edge at quarterback (Sam Bradford over Mark Sanchez), running back (Steven Jackson/Daryl Richardson over Shonn Greene) and receiver (Danny Amendola over anyone and everyone).

Ditka suffers minor stroke

CHICAGO – Hall of Famer Mike Ditka has had a minor stroke, an ESPN producer said.

ESPN's Seth Markman posted on Twitter that the former Chicago Bears coach and player fell ill Friday and will not appear on the network's NFL shows this weekend.

Markman wrote that Ditka "wanted everyone to know he's ok."

Ditka told the Chicago Tribune he was feeling "good right now and it's not a big deal." He was playing cards at a suburban country club Friday when he noticed his hands "weren't working quite right," and he then started having difficulty speaking.

The 73-year-old Ditka had a heart attack during the 1988 season when he was coaching the Bears.

Abdul-Jabbar statue unveiled

LOS ANGELES – Kareem Abdul-Jabbar's skyhook has been captured in bronze for future generations of basketball fans.

Staples Center unveiled a nearly 16-foot-tall statue of the top scorer in NBA history Friday night, immortalizing Jabbar's famed hook shot alongside statues of fellow Los Angeles Lakers greats Magic Johnson and Jerry West.

Abdul-Jabbar is depicted in his signature goggles, wristbands and the standard 1980s short-shorts below his No. 33 jersey.

Czechs take lead in Davis Cup

PRAGUE – The Czech Republic won the doubles Saturday to take a 2-1 lead over defending champion Spain in the Davis Cup final, moving one victory away from its first title as an independent nation.

Tomas Berdych and Radek Stepanek rallied to beat Marcel Granollers and Marc Lopez 3-6, 7-5, 7-5, 6-3 to take the edge going into Sunday's reverse singles.

Berdych and Stepanek improved their Davis Cup doubles record to 12-1 by converting their third match point in front of more than 13,000 fans at the O2 Arena, who blew trumpets, beat drums and cheered loudly between points.

Wagner, Mura capture gold

PARIS – U.S. skater Ashley Wagner and Takahito Mura of Japan delivered clean free programs on Saturday to overtake the leaders and win gold at the Trophee Bompard.

After Mura topped American Jeremy Abbott with a solid performance in the free skate, Wagner nailed her jumps and passed 14-year-old Julia Lipnitskaia, who dropped to third place behind another Russian teenager, 15-year-old Elizaveta Tuktamysheva — last year's winner.

Wagner's performance was even more impressive because she skated despite feeling ill on the ice.

Even McKayla Maroney was impressed.

A photo of the Olympic gold medalist gymnast and President Barack Obama doing Maroney's now-famous "McKayla Maroney is not impressed" face went viral Saturday after the White House posted it on Twitter. The two took the photo Thursday when Maroney and her Fierce Five teammates visited the White House.

Maroney says she "freaked out" when Obama asked her about the face and told her he makes it once a day.

Tide rolls to easy victory

■ Alabama bounces back in 49-0 romp

DAVE MARTIN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Western Carolina running back Michael Johnson (5) is stopped by the Alabama defense during the second half of their game at Bryant-Denny Stadium in Tuscaloosa, Ala., on Saturday. Defending for Alabama are defensive back Nick Perry (27), defensive lineman Quinton Dial (90) and linebacker Nico Johnson (35). At rear is Western Carolina offensive lineman Matt DeGraffinreed (63). Alabama bounced back from its upset loss to Texas A&M with a 49-0 victory over the Catamounts.

Eddie Lacy rushed for three first-half touchdowns and AJ McCarron set Alabama's single-season record for passing TDs as Alabama routed Western Carolina 49-0 on Saturday.

The Crimson Tide (10-1) rebounded from a loss to No. 9 Texas A&M by building a 42-0 halftime lead against the Catamounts (1-10), a Football Championship Subdivision team with two wins in as many seasons. It was Alabama's third shutout of the season.

McCarron completed all six of his attempts for 133 yards and his 21st touchdown before exiting midway through the second quarter. Lacy ran for 99 yards on 10 carries with two 7-yard touchdowns and a 3-yarder. Neither played after halftime.

Broadway, who completed 23 of 33 passes, struggled early on, throwing two interceptions as the Ragin' Cajuns trailed 27-17 with six minutes left in the fourth quarter.

Louisiana-Lafayette (6-4, 4-2), which lost to Florida 27-20 last week on a blocked punt return for a touchdown with two seconds left, began its rally on its own 28-yard line.

From there, Broadway drove Louisiana-Lafayette 72 yards in 11 plays, connecting with Jamal Robinson for a 4-yard touchdown to draw the Ragin' Cajuns within 27-24.

■ Murray State 42, SEMO 35: Duane Brady returned a kickoff 85 yards for the winning touchdown with 2:55 to play as Murray State capped a frenetic fourth quarter by defeating Southeast Missouri State 42-35 Saturday in the season finale for both teams.

The return was the second of the game for the Racers (5-6, 4-4 Ohio Valley Conference), who led 14-3 in the second quarter following Walter Powell's 100-yard punt return.

After Powell caught a 14-yard TD pass from Casey Brockman to put Murray State up 35-21 with 12:45 remaining, the Redhawks (3-8, 2-6) tied it with 3:07 left on TD runs of 12 yards by Levi Terrell and 8 yards by Ron Coleman.

■ Georgia 45, Georgia Southern 14: Aaron Murray threw four touchdown passes and Todd Gurley became only the second true freshman in Georgia history to rush for 1,000 yards.

■ Florida 23, Jacksonville St. 0: No. 7 Florida used a strong defensive effort to overcome a sluggish offensive performance.

The Gators scored a touchdown on their first possession when Mike Gillislee plowed into the end zone from 7 yards out. But that was the only offensive touchdown all day from Florida.

■ LSU 41, Mississippi 35: Jeremy Hill scored his third touchdown with 15 seconds left to lift LSU to a victory.

The game included seven turnovers, numerous momentum swings and long touchdowns, perhaps none better than Odell Beckham Jr.'s 89-yard punt return for a score.

■ Texas A&M 47, Sam Houston St. 28: Johnny Manziel threw for 267 yards and three touchdowns, and ran for 100 yards and two more scores in a bit more than a half for Texas A&M.

■ Florida St. 41, Maryland 14: Devonta Freeman ran for 148 yards and two touchdowns as Florida State earned a spot in the Atlantic Coast Conference championship game.

■ Clemson 62, N.C. State 48: Tajh Boyd threw for five touchdowns and ran for three more scores to lead Clemson to a record-shattering win.

■ South Carolina 24, Wofford 7: Kenny Miles rushed for 127 yards and a touchdown and South Carolina pulled out a closer-than-expected 24-7 win over an FCS opponent.

■ Nebraska 38, Minnesota 14: Taylor Martinez threw for 308 yards and two touchdowns to Kenny Bell while becoming Nebraska's career passing leader.

■ UCLA 38, USC 28: Brett Hundley passed for 234 yards and a touchdown and rushed for two more scores as UCLA clinched the Pac-12 South title and snapped a five-game losing streak in the crosstown rivalry.

■ Utah State 48, Louisiana Tech 41: Kerwynn Williams scored on a 4-yard touchdown run to give Utah State a lead in overtime and the Aggies stopped Louisiana Tech on four plays to win and clinch at least a share of the Western Athletic Conference championship.

■ Rutgers 10, Cincinnati 3: Savon Huggins ran for a career-high 179 yards, and Rutgers' defense had another shut-down showing and the Scarlet Knights stayed in control of the Big East.

■ Michigan 42, Iowa 17: Devin Gardner accounted for six touchdowns to help Michigan rout Iowa.

■ Oklahoma St. 59, Texas Tech 21: Isaiah Anderson had a career-best 174 yards receiving and caught three long touchdown passes from Clint Chelf in his final home game for Oklahoma State.

■ Kent State 31, Bowling Green 24: Dri Archer had two long touchdown runs and finished with 241 yards rushing, leading Kent State to its first Mid-American Conference title game.

■ Purdue 20, Illinois 17: Akeem Hunt turned a short pass into a 63-yard touchdown, and Purdue took another step toward a second consecutive bowl berth with a 20-17 victory at Illinois on Saturday.

■ Penn State 45, Indiana 22: Receiver Allen Robinson had three highlight-reel scoring catches and Matt McGloin threw for four touchdowns to lead Penn State in a 45-22 win Saturday over Indiana.

■ Mississippi St. 45, Arkansas 14: Tyler Russell threw for 274 yards and four touchdowns to lead Mississippi State to a 45-14 victory over Arkansas on Saturday.

■ Vanderbilt 41, Tennessee 18: Andre Hal intercepted two passes and Jordan Rodgers threw for two touchdowns as Vanderbilt routed Tennessee 41-18 Saturday night for the Commodores' fifth straight victory, clinching their first winning record in the regular season since 1982.

FRED BECKHAM/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ohio State's Deshaun Thomas, left, and Rhode Island's Nikola Malesevic fight for a loose ball during the second half of their game in the Hall of Fame Tip-Off tournament on Saturday.

Deshaun Thomas scored 25 points and grabbed 10 rebounds and No. 4 Ohio State beat Rhode Island 69-58 in the Hall of Fame Tip-Off tournament in Connecticut on Saturday.

Lenzelle Smith Jr. added 15 points, Aaron Craft had 13 points and four assists for the Buckeyes (2-0) who struggled with the Rams (0-3) well into the second half.

Xavier Munford had 16 points to lead Rhode Island, which trailed by just four at halftime.

The Rams were down just six when Craft hit a 3-point shot that bounced around the rim and in with 6:45 left and then stole the ball on the other end of the court.

That led to a technical foul on Rhode Island coach Dan Hurley.

■ Memphis 65, Samford 54: Adonis Thomas scored 16 points and Antonio Barton added 14 points and No. 17 Memphis escaped with a 65-54 victory over Samford on Saturday night in an opening game of the Battle 4 Atlantis Tournament.

Joe Jackson added 13 points, four assists and three steals for Memphis (2-0), which converted all eight of its free throws in the final minute to preserve the victory.

■ Notre Dame 78, BYU 68: Jack Cooley had 19 points and 13 rebounds to lead No. 20 Notre Dame to a 78-68 victory over BYU in the third-place game of the Coaches vs. Cancer Classic on Saturday night.

Jerian Grant had 19 points — 17 in the second half — and Eric Atkins added 16, including the 3-pointer that gave the Fighting Irish a cushion after the Cougars had pulled within 63-61 with 4:28 to play.

■ San Diego St. 60, Missouri St. 44: Jamaal Franklin scored 15 of his 22 points in the first half to put No. 23 San Diego State up early, and James Rahon hit a key 3-pointer late in a 60-44 win over Missouri State.

The Aztecs led 39-30 midway through the second half before the Bears rallied. Missouri State (1-1) pulled within 41-37 on Anthony Downing's basket with 7:13 left.

■ Eastern Ky. 71, Towson 69: Mike DiNunno led Eastern Kentucky with 17 points, and Deverin Muff hit two late free throws as Eastern Kentucky beat Towson in overtime 71-69 Saturday night.

■ Kentucky women 80, High Point 45: A'dia Mathies scored all of her 17 points in the first half to help No. 6 Kentucky rout High Point 80-45 on Saturday.

Grizzlies beat Bobcats for eighth straight win

Wire reports

Mike Conley scored 20 points and the Memphis Grizzlies beat the Charlotte Bobcats 94-87 on Saturday night for their eighth consecutive victory.

Zach Randolph added 18 points and 12 rebounds, and three other players scored in double figures for the Grizzlies, who own the NBA's best record at 8-1. Rudy Gay had 16 points and Marc Gasol and Tony Allen scored 12 apiece.

Memphis led by as many as 17 points in the fourth quarter.

Byron Mullens scored 18 points and Kemba Walker added 17 for the Bobcats, who cut the Grizzlies' lead to five points three times in the final period, the last at 92-87 on Bismack Biyombo's dunk with 13 seconds remaining.

Charlotte had won three straight.

■ Celtics 107, Raptors 89: Rajon Rondo tied his season high with 20 assists, and Jason Terry scored 20 points to help the Celtics get the victory.

Rondo appeared at full strength after sitting out a loss at Brooklyn on Thursday night because of a sprained right ankle. He had seven assists in the first quarter and 11 at halftime, extending his streak of consecutive games with double-digit assists to 33.

Rondo's streak is the third-longest in NBA history and puts him within four games of tying John Stockton. Magic Johnson holds the record at 46 consecutive games with 10 or more assists.

Paul Pierce added 19 points for Boston (6-4). Rookie Jared Sullinger had his first double-double with 12 points and 11 rebounds.

Andrea Bargnani and John Lucas led Toronto (2-7) with 15 points apiece.

■ Mavericks 103, Cavaliers 95: Mayo scored 19 points and the Mavericks used a pair of 9-0 runs in the fourth quarter to secure the road win.

Chris Kaman scored 15 points while Vince Carter and Darren Collison added 14 apiece for Dallas, which won on the road for the second time in six games.

Kyrie Irving, who left briefly in the third quarter with a finger injury, led Cleveland with 26 points, but the Cavaliers lost their fifth straight game.

■ Jazz 83, Wizards 76: Al Jefferson scored 21 points, Gordon Hayward added 15 in his first game as a reserve this season, and the Jazz kept the Wizards winless.

The Jazz committed 19 turnovers but pulled away in the fourth quarter while closing a four-game road trip with a sloppy performance.

Upcoming waterfowl season looks promising

'If we get water, we will hold birds for a long time'

By Lee McClellan
Kentucky Afield

FRANKFORT – The table is set for a wonderful Thanksgiving dinner. The dressing awaits, the cook just put a spoon into the green bean and sweet potato casseroles, the gravy steams and pumpkin pies cool on racks. All that is needed is the turkey.

Waterfowl seasons open Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 22, and the season is similar to this dinner. The conditions are in place for a productive waterfowl season; all that is needed is water.

"We are still hurting for water across the state," said Rocky Pritchert, migratory bird program coordinator for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. "The Ohio River is low, reservoirs are low, farm ponds are low. Conditions are pretty even throughout Kentucky."

The drought that gripped a large chunk of Kentucky caused these low water conditions, but also provided a potential feast for waterfowl if rains fall.

"Areas that are normally moist have grown up in abundant natural vegetation from the drought," Pritchert explained. "If we get water, we will hold birds for a long time because there is lots of food out there for them to eat. We should have a good opener for waterfowl season."

The recent fronts pushed ducks from the north into the traditional waterfowl areas in the Purchase Region and along the Ohio River.

"Good numbers of ducks are showing up at Ballard Wildlife Management Area (WMA) in Western Kentucky," Pritchert said. "The resident Canada goose population had a good reproductive year. We may see more geese to the south this year because of the lack of food from the drought in the northern tier states. Those states were more impacted by the drought, so we may see more goose migration from the north this season. We hope to get a better push than the last two years."

Mike Morton, area manager for Sloughs WMA in Henderson and Union counties, said the area holds several thousand white-fronted geese, snow geese and Canada geese along with 3,000 or so ducks. "It is fairly average for this time of year," he explained. "We have a few more snow geese than we usually do. White-fronted geese have made up the majority of goose numbers on the area in winter for the last four years. If we can get snow cover up north, it will really roll the geese out to us."

Waterfowl hunters need to remember that both duck and goose seasons open statewide on the same day, Nov. 22 this year, except in the Northeastern Goose Zone where Canada goose season opens Jan. 1. Some wildlife management areas may have different opening dates.

Hunters may take only one brant this year as part of their five goose daily bag limit. Brant are rare in Kentucky. However, hunters may take up to four scaup as part of the six duck daily bag limit, an increase of two scaup from last year.

"Scaup numbers have recovered to the point to allow for additional harvest," Pritchert explained. "Scaup are usually associated with larger bodies like Kentucky Lake and Lake Barkley."

To get their duck limits, hunters may want to target farm ponds. Many ponds remain low from the drought, but rainfall will create an ideal hunting situation.

"The exposed banks of those farm ponds are now grown up with a variety of emergent vegetation such as barnyard and panic grass and smart weed," Pritchert said. "If we get water on those plants, there is a potential to hold a lot of ducks."

Duck, coot and merganser season closes Nov. 24, but opens again Dec. 5 before closing on Jan. 27, 2013. Statewide goose seasons close Jan. 31, 2013 except the snow goose conservation order season. For more information on waterfowl season, pick up a copy of the 2012-2013 Kentucky Hunting Guide for Waterfowl, available wherever hunting licenses are sold. You may request a copy by calling 1-800-858-1549 or view a printable copy at the Kentucky Fish and Wildlife Web page at fw.ky.gov.

Man hopes hunters learn from his mistake

The Associated Press

MEMPHIS, Tenn. – A Memphis man hopes his deer hunting accident serves as a cautionary tale for other hunters.

The Commercial Appeal reported 47-year-old Bob Thurman spent four hours crawling to a vehicle after he broke a leg in a 14-foot fall while trying to secure a deer stand. The accident was similar to one that killed a Columbia man last week.

Thurman planned to be in the woods when the modern gun deer season opens Saturday. Instead, he will be in a rehabilitation facility.

Thurman fell while trying to mount a ladder stand on a friend's property in Fayette County without having someone to help him.

"I was out there trying to attach a 14-foot ladder stand to a tree by myself, and I knew better than that," Thurman said. "When you're hanging a ladder stand, you always need two people — one up in the stand and one on the ground making sure it doesn't fall. I didn't follow that rule, and it almost killed me."

A ladder stand is a ladder with a platform atop it where a hunter sits. Hunters often find a likely spot where deer will pass beneath a tree and then attach the stand and leave it in place through the season.

Thurman concedes he made a second mistake as well. Once he fell and injured himself, he realized his cellphone was back in his pickup truck, some distance away. He had to crawl in agony to reach his all-terrain vehicle and then ride it back to his truck to call for help.

Conservation officer Ty Inmon, who investigated Thurman's accident, said what happened to Thurman should be taken to heart by all hunters.

"A few years ago, a guy fell backward out of a tree stand at Ames Plantation and was able to call for help hanging there upside down because his cellphone was in his shirt pocket," Inmon said.

The body of 49-year-old Kerry Seiber of Columbia was found last weekend below a homemade deer stand that was 23 feet up a tree. His gun was still hanging in the stand.

Deer crashes into car window, kills two

The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Ark. – An Arkansas couple was killed after a deer ricocheted off another vehicle and crashed through the window of their car, state police said.

The crash happened Thursday morning on Arkansas 27 in south Arkansas. According to a preliminary report from Arkansas State Police, a pickup struck the deer, which then flew through the air and landed on the car driven by Glenn Johnson, 59, of Nashville.

Johnson lost control of his car and crashed into the front doors of a Nashville building. State police said he was killed in the crash, along with his wife Margaret Johnson, 61.

Cpl. Robert Wilson of Arkansas State Police said the business wasn't open when the Johnsons' car crashed into it. Wilson said the couple was traveling with their two nephews, 10-year-old Dadrick Franklin and 8-year-old Ladarious Franklin.

The Texarkana Gazette reported that both boys were injured and taken to Arkansas Children's Hospital, where Dadrick was in critical condition and Ladarious was in fair condition.

The driver of the pickup that first hit the deer was not injured.

By Ira Podell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — So much for a two-week break. Just over a week since the last set of failed negotiations, the NHL and the locked-out players' association will return to the bargaining table Monday night.

Conversations that restarted Friday between NHL deputy commissioner Bill Daly and NHLPA special counsel Steve Fehr produced enough positive movement Saturday to set up another face-to-face meeting that the sides hope will lead to an agreement to save the hockey season.

NHL Commissioner Gary Bettman suggested to union executive director Donald Fehr on Thursday the sides take two weeks off from negotiations. The union maintained its desire to keep talking, and now bargaining is back on.

Owners and players met for several consecutive days last week in New York, but made little progress. Negotiations ended in an angry exchange last Friday, but bargaining resumed two days later only to break off again in just over an hour.

Staying apart never appeared to be a good option, and the NHL now seems to agree.

All games through Nov. 30 have already been taken off the schedule, more cancellations are likely within a week, the Winter Classic has been wiped out, the All-Star game is the next big event in jeopardy, and the whole season could be lost, too, in the blink of an eye if a new deal can't be hammered out.

The players have stuck to their position that negotiations are the only way to work out differences, and that they are willing to meet any time the NHL wants to.

The NHL contends that the union has submitted the same proposal multiple times without moving in the league's direction. The union says it has agreed to come down from receiving 57 percent of hockey-related revenues to a 50-50 split. The league wants that to go into effect in the first year of the agreement, while the union wants to get there gradually.

Seven years ago, after the entire 2004-05 season was lost to a lockout, the players' association accepted a salary-cap system for the first time. The union feels it shouldn't have to bear the brunt of the concessions now after league revenues reached a record high of over $3 billion last season.

This 63-day lockout has claimed 327 regular-season games, and hope of a new deal and the start of the already-shortened season — likely of 68 games per team — on Dec. 1 has started to wane.

It is more than just finances preventing a deal. The disagreements over player contract terms have emerged as just as big an impasse.

The NHL wants to limit contracts to five years, make rules to prohibit back-diving contracts the league feels circumvent the salary cap, keep players ineligible for unrestricted free agency until they are 28 or have eight years of professional service time, cut entry-level deals to two years, and make salary arbitration after five years.

Hannah Gilmore, the 5-year-old daughter of Col. Chris and Nikki Gilmore, currently stationed in London, England, and granddaughter of Terry and Marcie Kasinger of Robards, was recently caught by her kindergarten teacher holding hands with a boy in her class, and then she kissed him.

The teacher asked: "Hannah, what would your parents say if I told them that you kissed a boy?"

"I don't know," the little girl replied, "but be sure to tell them that I was hugging him, too!"

Toddler Joy Byun, daughter of Juman and Sarah Paff Byun of Washington, D.C., brought her dad a "Curious George" book from the shelf and asked: "Do you know this book?'

"Yes," her dad responded. "Do YOU know this book?"

Joy nodded that she did indeed, then added: "But I'm just a child, so you should read it to me."

With Thanksgiving just around the corner, that can only mean it's also time for the 79th-annual Hadi Shrine Circus, which will take place at The Ford Center in downtown Evansville starting Thanksgiving Day and continuing through that weekend.

Performance times are 3 p.m. on Thursday; 9:30 a.m., 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. on Friday; 9:30 a.m., 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. on Saturday; and 3 p.m. on Nov. 25.

New program lets inmates, dogs make good use of their time while behind bars

MIKE LAWRENCE / THE GLEANER

Zeus and Caesar seem eager to play as Henderson County Detention Center inmates move their dogs from the kennel to the yard so the kennels can be cleaned. The detention center and New Hope Animal Rescue Center have partnered to create a training program that pairs inmates with problem dogs to teach them manners so they can be adopted.

Maizy used to think it was OK to jump in the middle of her family's dinner table to grab a bite to eat.

And Lady often wasn't very lady-like to guests.

Those are the reasons these dogs and three others were selected by New Hope Animal Rescue Center to participate in a new training program at the Henderson County Detention Center to learn some manners.

KATHY MOORE

Doggie manners, that is, such as sitting when told to sit, staying when told to stay, and not growling and baring their teeth at friendly strangers.

Along the way, the dogs are also learning how to trust humans and realizing what it feels like to be loved.

"Each dog we sent truly had reasons why they weren't being adopted," said New Hope President Paula Hawkins. "We sent some pretty tough ones out there."

Six inmates at the local jail, under the direction of Capt. Joe Duncan, have been working with the dogs for about two months.

On Dec. 1, an adoptathon for the six jail "graduates" and other New Hope dogs will be held from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the rescue center, located at 526 Atkinson St.

Until then, the inmates are spending most of their days working with the dogs and making them better prepared to lead normal lives as household pets.

"We've taken dogs from New Hope that have had problems getting adopted or were adopted and brought back," Duncan said. "We're putting them through a course in simple obedience training to get them ready to go back into the house."

To prepare for the program, the captain first enrolled in some instructional classes himself, training through a PetSmart program, and also by visiting area penitentiaries. Then Duncan interviewed inmates for the six available training slots. Only certain inmates are eligible for the dog training and other work-release programs.

Inmate Mark Gray gets an enthusiastic greeting from Fritz, who once chewed the bumper of a new boat.

Since late September, the six dogs have been spending the whole day with the inmates as the men go about their usual work routine of tending the jail garden, working on the bicycle program and repairing mowing equipment and jail vehicles.

For example, Duncan said, a typical day would start off with the inmates taking the dogs out of their kennels and setting them up in their own special spot in the yard where they're staked to a 20-foot runner while their kennels are cleaned and their food and water freshened.

Then the dogs and the inmates may spend the next hour walking and playing and working on obedience training before the dogs are given a rest and the inmates focus on some of their other projects. Duncan said there are numerous areas set up around the jail grounds where the dogs are attached to 75- and 100-foot runners, allowing them to run around in the grass or just take it easy.

Inmate Slade Hanley puts a leash on Lady before starting the morning routine that includes staking the dogs out in the yard while their kennels are cleaned and fresh water and food are put out.

Inmate Mark Gray gives Maizy some love. The dog once had a bad habit of jumping up on the dinner table and helping herself to food.

The routine continues, with the inmates alternately spending time with their dogs and then with their repair work and other duties while the dogs rest. "They work with them on and off all day long."

The dogs are taught the proper way to walk on a leash. They also learn to play fetch with tennis balls and Frisbees, making sure they understand their job is to retrieve the thrown object, bring it back and drop it on command.

"They're teaching them how to play and to get along with others," said Duncan, a 14-year veteran at the jail.

"We're trying to get these dogs to realize somebody cares about them," he said.

And weeks before the program was completed, it was obvious the dogs were getting the message.

"A couple of these dogs were highly abused (in the past) and were timid," Duncan said. "Now they don't know a stranger and they love everybody who comes around here."

Hawkins, the New Hope founder, said she's witnessed a remarkable turnaround in all of the dogs' personalities.

"I've seen big changes," she said. "I'm amazed. It is so cool."

Hawkins said the jail is furnishing a great living environment for the dogs, and the inmates are able to provide much more individual attention than the pups would be able to receive at the rescue center.

"They've taken good care of them," she said. "They're getting a lot more one-on-one time spent with them.

"They get grass under their feet, they get to run, they just get to be a dog," Hawkins added.

After the Dec. 1 adoption event, the jail will take a couple of weeks to prepare for the next session. Depending on the dogs, future sessions may not last as many weeks as the initial one.

Duncan said the program has proved beneficial to both the dogs and the inmates.

"A lot of these guys were not used to having a lot of responsibilities" and rarely had to take care of anybody or anything other than themselves, he said. "This has gotten them back into the routine of taking care of something that's living. Now they have to get up every day to take care" of their dogs.

The goal of the dog program is the same as the objective of other jail programs, Duncan said: "To give the individual the opportunity and tools to learn something so when they get out they can be productive members of society."

Essentially, that's the same goal for their canine counterparts.

"I think it is a win-win situation," Hawkins said. "The dogs get a chance to have one-on-one training and at the same time the inmates are getting a chance to really do something that makes a difference when it comes to adopting out these shelter dogs. They both are making their time behind bars a little easier to deal with."

Layla, 4, left, and Oscar, 7, are both available for adoption from the Humane Society of Henderson County.

Take us home

If you're looking for an easy-going, front-declawed cat, either Layla or Oscar would probably be picture-perfect.

"They're both pretty laid-back," said shelter staffer Tricia Jeffers.

Layla, 4, has been at the shelter for about a week but isn't too crazy about shelter life after being in a home for years. "She's pretty shy at first," Jeffers said.

The brown tabby with lots of white patches has already been spayed and is ready for immediate adoption.

Oscar, 7, has also been at the shelter for about a week and has already been neutered. He would be especially good for an older couple or a family that doesn't have young children, Jeffers said.

He is also front-declawed and not overly energetic but enjoys being held and petted.

The adopt fee for Layla or Oscar is $30, although the usual cat adoption fee is $50.

Another much more active shelter resident is Jazzy, a 2-year-old coonhound that's been at the shelter for two months.

"He used to be a hunting dog and had a pretty rough life," Jeffers said. "He'd be an excellent companion dog and he loves to ride in a car."

The shelter staff prefers that Jazzy go to a family that will keep him indoors but will also make sure he gets plenty of exercise, either in a large fence-in yard or on a leash.

"He's been through too much" to let him hunt anymore, Jeffers said, noting than one of the dog's old knee injuries is still quite apparent, although it doesn't slow him down.

Jazzy gets along well with children and other dogs and doesn't pay much attention to cats.

"He's going to be a good companion dog to somebody," the staffer said. "He wants to be a pet."

Jazzy's adoption fee is $85.

Adoption hours at the shelter are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays, Thursdays and Fridays; 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Tuesdays; noon to 5 p.m. Wednesdays; and 9 a.m. to noon Saturdays.

For more information about Layla, Oscar, Jazzy or other homeless animals, contact the Humane Society of Henderson County at 826-8966.

Jazzy, a 2-year-old coonhound mix, is also available for adoption from the local Humane Society.

Weddings

Cornbleet-Shortridge

Vera Elizabeth Cornbleet and Mark Joseph Shortridge, both of Henderson, were married Sept. 15 at the bride's family home in Henderson.

The Rev. Pem Pfisterer Clark officiated. Music for the ceremony was provided by the bride and Corey Ivy.

The groom is the son of the late Thurman and Gerloma Shortridge.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a soft ivory satin gown with a drop waist, crystal spaghetti straps and a cathedral train. The gown was embellished with silver embroidery and Swarovski crystals.

As a headpiece, she wore a handmade silver tiara decorated with crystals and pearls and a fingertip-length tulle veil, also edged with crystals and pearls. She carried a bouquet of white roses, purple orchids and flowered rhinestones.

The bride's brother, Robert Cornbleet II of Henderson, was the groomsman of honor. The bride also was attended by Becky Snyder Farris of Louisville; Vickie Stepp Wood of Bowling Green; and Shirley Clark of Henderson.

The groom's best man was Russell Doughty of Marion, Ill. He was also attended by Robert Cornbleet Sr. of Henderson.

The bride's mother wore a long, flowing empire-waist gown in jewel-tone hues of green, purple and blue, accompanied by a wristlet of roses and orchids.

An outdoor tent reception was held at the bride's family home following the ceremony.

The bride is a graduate of Western Kentucky University, where she earned a Bachelor of Science degree in comprehensive interior design. She also earned an Associate of Science degree from Henderson Community College as a medical lab technician. She is employed by Robert Cornbleet LLC.

The groom is employed by Babcock and Wilcox in Mount Vernon, Ind.

Prenuptial events included a "fun in the sun" shower in Clearwater, Fla.; a bridal luncheon shower hosted by Mrs. Jim Marshall at Biaggi's in Evansville; and a "corn in the can" shower/pool party given by Mr. and Mrs. Tom Rugg and Karen Bryant.

Overnight guests?

■ Small, special touches can make visitors feel welcome

By Roneisha Mullen
Toledo Blade

The holidays are coming — and so are the overnight guests.

Hosting may not be your favorite thing to do, and no matter how much you may dread doing spring cleaning in the winter to prepare for over-nighters, you want your visitors to feel welcome and comfortable in your home.

Creating space for guests involves more than providing a comfortable place to sleep. It's an opportunity to make people feel welcome and ensure that their time spent with you is memorable, says Tina Mather Bothe, owner of the Little Purple House Bed and Breakfast in Perrysburg, Ohio.

"It's more than just changing the bed," Bothe said. "It's the little things that count, like fresh flowers or a nice fluffy robe."

Most guests won't expect you to roll out the red carpet if it's not within your means to do so, but you can do a few special things to let them know how happy you are to have them.

Some tips:

1. Prepare the spare bedroom. Do more than just change the sheets. Bothe suggests using your best linens and spraying them with a scented de-stresser to help guests relax. At her place, every guest arrives to fresh flowers and reading materials, including magazines, books and the newspaper.

If there isn't a spare bedroom, offer up your room or an air bed, or prepare the couch with sheets and a blanket. It's important that visitors have a designated space.

2. Clean out the closet. Just because they're traveling doesn't mean your guest should have to live out of a suitcase. Clear out some space in the closet or a few drawers in the dresser. Be sure to leave a few empty hangers.

A full-length mirror would also be helpful. If closet and dresser space isn't available, leave an empty laundry basket so visitors can at least keep their dirty laundry separate from the clean.

3. Childproof the place. If guests are bringing along the little ones, consider putting away valuables that can be lost or easily broken. Find out if the child is a bed-wetter and prepare your furniture before arrival. Ask parents to bring child-proofing items such as cabinet locks and baby gates or consider borrowing them from a neighbor.

4. Have extra bathroom essentials on hand. There's always that one person who forgets to pack a toothbrush. Stock the bathroom with new toothbrushes and toothpaste. And cleans towels are a must. After you've provided the basic necessities, consider some extra touches, like specialty soaps, shampoo and lotions.

5. Break out Grandma's china. Using the good china and crystal at dinner or your best linens in the bedroom and bathrooms makes guests feel important. It also lets visitors know that their stay with you is a special occasion.

6. What's for dinner? Consider your guests' food preferences. If one is vegetarian or has food allergies, stock the pantry and refrigerator with options to accommodate his/her needs. Also, show your company where to find snacks and clean dishes and encourage them to help themselves.

7. Provide a warm welcome. Have refreshments or a meal prepared when your guests arrive.

Pat Smith of Temperance, Ohio, likes to use scented candles and fresh-baked cookies or cake to create a warm, welcoming aroma. Another suggestion is a welcome basket for guests filled with personal items or fanciful treats such as chocolates, magazines or puzzles, and other small gifts.

8. Plan activities of interest. Find out your visitors' plans before they arrive. Check to see if there is anything in particular they'd like to do. Keep in mind events and activities, such as shows, concerts and sporting events, that will take place during your guests' visit.

9. Say a generous goodbye. Don't send guests home empty-handed. Parting gifts can be anything from homemade desserts or souvenir refrigerator magnets to T-shirts. Handwritten notes and greeting cards also make good gifts. Whatever the gift, use it as a chance to remind your guests of their visit with you.

It's OK to unwrap gift now if giver can't be at shower

COLUMNIST

Q: I received a shower gift from a friend who can't come to the shower. Is it OK to open it right away?

A: Yes. You should go ahead and open it and send a thank-you note within a week or two to let your friend know you received the gift intact and will miss the person at the shower.

If the giver will be at the shower, but the gift was pre-shipped to your home (and is clearly intended for the shower), bring it to the party and open it there with the rest of your friends' gifts.

Candles, gourds ideal for table

Home & Garden Television

Get ready for the holidays with these easy ideas:

■ Instead of one large centerpiece for the Thanksgiving table, which has to be moved when the turkey arrives anyway, sprinkle the center of your table with votive candles and gourds. Complete the look with a mini-pumpkin on top of each plate.

■ Once Thanksgiving is past, add autumnal elegance to your dining-room table with a simple basket or bowl full of gourds. Available at most grocery stores, these mini-squashes come in shades of orange, yellow, red and green.

■ Mix and match metallic looks with natural elements like fall branches or fresh fruit.

■ Fireplaces are the ultimate form of cozy fall comfort. No fireplace at your place? Get the same glow by assembling a large collection of candles or adding small votive candles to windowsills.

■ Give your foyer style and personality. Add a mirror and small baskets.

Cuoco well-suited for non-genius role on 'Big Bang Theory'

By Frazier Moore
AP television writer

NEW YORK — "I know this sounds like it's not true," says Kaley Cuoco, "but as huge as the show is, it's just part of my life — not my whole life."

"The Big Bang Theory" is huge all right. Now in its sixth season (airing Thursdays on CBS at 7 p.m. CST), it reigns as TV's hottest sitcom, and it's now hotter than ever with an average 19 million viewers each week.

As virtually every viewer knows by now, "Big Bang" centers on a gaggle of geeky Cal Tech scientists, chief among them Sheldon (Jim Parsons) and Leonard (Johnny Galecki), apartment mates who, by great good sitcom fortune, live across the hall from Penny, played by Cuoco. Penny aspires to be an actress but pays the rent by waiting tables at a Cheesecake Factory.

Unlike the boys, Penny is no genius. But neither is she a dumb blonde, which is key to the genius of "Big Bang."

"She's obviously not book-smart," says Cuoco, "but she's street smart and good-hearted and can make fun of herself. The producers never made her ditzy. Maybe she doesn't always get what the guys are talking about. But in that way she represents most of the world."

It was pretty smart to make Penny the "normal" character through whom the audience can enter the abstruse, brainy realm the guys occupy. At the same time, sexy Penny presides as a universal object of desire.

Cuoco is totally up to the task of playing such a gal. During a recent mid-afternoon interview, she is hearty and self-possessed and comfortably glam.

She orders a vodka martini — "straight up, very cold, with a twist," she tells her waitress, then explains to the reporter, "My new drink. My new thing."

Cuoco

All that, plus she has a sentimental streak.

Reflecting on what her hit sitcom has meant to other parts of her life, she mentions her parents — her dad, a real estate agent who has weathered tough times, and her stay-at-home mom in southern California. During her childhood, they often had to cut corners, she says, "but I never noticed when things weren't great.

"This year, I'm hosting Thanksgiving and Christmas with, like, 25 people at my house — I can do that now." Her voice starts to tremble and her eyes moisten. "It's emotional, cause I remember we could never afford that. The show has been the hugest blessing."

Cuoco, who will turn 27 on Nov. 30, grew up happy to be the center of attention.

"I was always very silly and never took myself seriously," she recalls. "When my father had the camera out, I'd be up close and annoying. My father would keep saying, 'Move back! Move back!'"

Her parents were supportive when she wanted to try acting, "but if I wanted to audition, I had to play tennis" (at which she excelled as a teen). "If I played tennis, I had to be in a dance class. I always had multiple activities, so I never had to count on any one of them to feel successful."

She landed a role in a 1992 TV film starring Donald Sutherland. She played Maureen McCormick in the 2000 TV film "Growing Up Brady." Along the way, she landed jobs in lots of episodic shows.

But by 2002, she was feeling discouraged. She hadn't worked in a year.

Then her agent phoned about a project called "8 Simple Rules for Dating My Teenage Daughter." Reluctantly she auditioned for the part of the older daughter in a household whose loving but bewildered dad would be played by John Ritter. Cuoco got the role.

Though it built into a hit for ABC its first season, "8 Simple Rules" is remembered mainly as the final project of the beloved Ritter, who died abruptly early in its second year. The show pushed on through a third season, but it never overcame Ritter's tragic absence.

"I just adored him," says Cuoco, unleashing a stream of memories of how he used to cut up on the set and how much she learned from him.

"He'd put a potato chip on his shoulder and go, 'Do I have a chip on my shoulder?' And we would just crack up! He would do it every day!

"Working with him showed me that I loved sitcoms," she goes on. "I'm a 'Bridesmaids' type of girl. I love silliness. That's who I am at heart, and I know I can do it. If my career path takes me elsewhere, that's great. But comedy is my forte."

"Big Bang" co-creator Chuck Lorre, who snagged Cuoco for the show, agrees. "Kaley was born to the form," he says in a separate interview. "There's an instinctive thing with comedy that some people have — an elegance and gracefulness, where no effort is apparent."

But there's effort for Cuoco, and on the job it pushes her to question everything.

"How could it not?" she says with a laugh. "I wonder, 'Why did I do that line that way?' And I also constantly think I'm fat and hate my teeth. But I've gotten better over the years. I've started to accept." She smiles, revealing nothing remotely wrong with those teeth. "It's going to be fine."

On the Table

Thanksgiving doesn't have to be big gathering

By Michele Kayal
Associated Press

Perhaps more than any other holiday, Thanksgiving is associated with big family gatherings. But that doesn't mean you need a house full of in-laws, uncles and cousins to celebrate in a meaningful way.

Newlyweds, empty-nesters, young adults on their own, even a couple of friends can have their turkey and eat it, too, creating a day that resonates with their new phase of life and leaves behind the muss, fuss and hassle of the ginormous family blow out.

"It really is a time for celebrating," says Martin Novell, a Los Angeles-based marriage and family therapist. "It's a time for giving thanks for the dreams that have been achieved, recognizing the disappointments and refocusing on the future by creating new adventures." And none of that requires a crowd.

KEEP IT SIMPLE

When it comes to cooking, take it down a notch. But don't skimp on taste or tradition. Roast a turkey breast instead of the whole bird, says Betty Crocker Kitchens cookbook editor Grace Wells, or even Rock Cornish game hens for a more elegant presentation. Buy what you can — rolls, mashed potatoes, stuffing — at a gourmet shop or supermarket. And above all, don't make a mess. "Why would you use three pans to make turkey and gravy?" says Julia Collin Davison, executive food editor of America's Test Kitchen books. "If you can do it in one, why not?"

RESTRAIN YOURSELF

Remember there are only two of you. Which doesn't mean you have to cut out the side dishes you love, says Davison. It just means you have to make them in smaller portions, even if you have to buy the casserole dishes to do it. Buy your vegetables in small amounts too, not in bulk bags. And perhaps most important, Davison says, prepare only what you're really going to eat. "It's one thing to use up a leftover dish, like mashed butternut squash. But you have more options if you don't cook the whole vegetable to begin with," Julia says. "Two people don't really need a whole puréed butternut squash."

BE CREATIVE

Pomegranate molasses on the turkey? Coconut milk in the gravy? Go for it. It's just the two of you, so who's going to complain? "You're not cooking for a crowd, so you can take some chances," Davison says. "You can push the limits a little bit."

Ditto for the leftovers. "I always love the leftover Thanksgiving meal the next day, the plate you shove in the microwave," she says. "But that's good for one day."

Branch out with your leftovers and make turkey curry, turkey soba noodle salad or a turkey gratin, a creamy stew topped with big hunks of your leftover baguette.

MAKE IT FESTIVE

Go full force on the holiday trappings, says Betty Crocker's Wells. Pull out the beautiful tablecloth and matching napkins, the china and the crystal. "If you're newlyweds or baby boomers or somewhere in between, you probably have nice dishes," she says. Create a centerpiece with candles and gourds, or buy a beautiful flower arrangement. Maybe even have a favor at each of your place settings — a favorite treat, a small book or gift of some kind.

HAVE FUN

You're not busy pleasing 15 relatives, so use that extra time for leisure, not for cooking or washing dishes. Go for a walk, take a hike, listen to some favorite music or go to a movie. Because you're not prepping a dozen side dishes and three or four pies, you can even use the days leading up to the holiday for exciting activities. "One of the things a good marriage does is they spend a lot of together time," says Novell, who recommends, for instance, using the days before Thanksgiving to search for a great new wine to have with the meal. "So Thanksgiving isn't only the holiday that's on Nov. 22, but it's a holiday that starts way before that."

START NEW TRADITIONS

Yes, when the clan is together there's football in the yard. But there can be lots of rituals for two, as well. Consider visiting your favorite park with a bagel breakfast, taking a long hike, or collecting leaves and other flora from your neighborhood to make a centerpiece together. "It's an easy activity that feels special to the day," Davison says.

ONE-PAN THANKSGIVING DINNER

A well-executed dinner for two can require as much planning as a feast for a crowd. Our intimate take on the traditional Thanksgiving — to feed two instead of a large family — is constructed so the entire meal is assembled and cooked together in one pan.

We make the stuffing from dinner rolls; use the same variety you buy to serve with the meal. We season the roasted vegetables and stuffing with a sage compound butter that also can be served at the table. The turkey tenderloin, though not as impressive as a full bird, gets a flavorful quick brine and a Parmesan crust. Best of all, you won't have a mountain of dishes to clean up.

So why does our dinner for two make four servings? Because it wouldn't be Thanksgiving without leftovers.

Servings: 4
Source: Recipe by Alison Ladman

FOR THE SAGE COMPOUND BUTTER

- 2 tablespoons minced fresh sage
- ¼ cup (½ stick) salted butter, softened
- ½ teaspoon lemon zest

FOR THE TURKEY

- 1½ pounds turkey tenderloin
- 2 tablespoons soy sauce
- ¼ cup maple syrup
- ½ cup apple cider
- 1 teaspoon ground black pepper
- ½ cup panko breadcrumbs
- ¼ grated Parmesan cheese

FOR THE STUFFING

- 4 dinner rolls, diced
- 1 small carrot, grated
- 2 tablespoons dried cranberries
- ¼ cup chopped toasted pecans, optional
- ½ cup chicken or turkey broth
- Salt and ground black pepper

FOR THE ROASTED VEGETABLES

- 2 medium Yukon gold potatoes, diced
- 1 cup diced butternut squash
- 1 small red onion, cut into wedges
- 1 cup Brussels sprouts, halved
- Salt and ground black pepper

FOR THE GRAVY

- 2 cups low-sodium chicken broth
- 2 tablespoons unsalted butter, softened
- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 1 teaspoon balsamic vinegar
- 1 teaspoon poultry seasoning
- Salt and ground black pepper

DIRECTIONS

1. First, prepare the butter. In a small bowl, stir together the sage, butter and lemon zest. Set aside.
2. Second, brine the turkey while preparing the rest of the dinner. In a large zip-close plastic bag, combine the turkey tenderloin, soy sauce, maple syrup, cider and black pepper. Refrigerate for 1 hour (or up to overnight).
3. Heat the oven to 400 F.
4. Next, make the stuffing. In a 9-by-13-inch baking pan, spread the diced dinner rolls in an even layer. Place in the oven to toast for 10 minutes.
5. Transfer the toasted diced dinner rolls to a medium bowl and toss with 1 tablespoon of the reserved sage butter so that it melts into the hot bread. Toss in the grated carrot, cranberries, pecans and broth. Season with salt and pepper. Coat the 9-by-13-inch pan with cooking spray, then spoon the stuffing into one half of the pan, arranging it in an even layer.
6. In the bowl that you made the stuffing, prepare the vegetables. Toss together the diced potatoes, squash, red onion and Brussels sprouts. Add 1 tablespoon more of the reserved sage butter and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Toss together, then spoon the vegetables into the other half of the prepared pan.
7. To finish preparing the turkey, in a shallow dish, such as a pie plate, stir together the panko and the Parmesan. Remove the turkey from the brine, discarding the brine. Dredge the turkey through the panko-Parmesan mixture, pressing it into the meat. Place the turkey over the stuffing. Roast for 1 hour, or until the vegetables are browned and tender and the turkey reaches 160 F.
8. During the final 15 minutes of roasting, prepare the gravy. In a small saucepan over medium-high, heat the broth until boiling. In a small bowl, mix the butter and flour to form a paste. Whisk the butter mixture into the boiling broth, then reduce heat to maintain a simmer. Cook for 5 minutes, or until thickened. Whisk in the balsamic vinegar and poultry seasoning, then season with salt and pepper.

Make sides that won't sideline little ones during big meal

By Alison Ladman
Associated Press

For a family-friendly Thanksgiving dinner, the sides matter. A lot.

Because if the mashed potatoes aren't truly wonderful, you're going to have some seriously upset children at the table. Which is to say, this isn't the time to experiment by spiking them with blue cheese or a 50-50 ratio of garlic to potato, or to test whether mashed cauliflower really does taste just like the real thing.

This is the time to make wonderfully fluffy, buttery, salty, peppery, delicious mashed potatoes.

By the same token, if you want those green beans and carrots to go anywhere near the children's mouths, you might consider a bit of enticement. To help you, we've come up with a kid-pleasing but adult-friendly sweet-and-sour glaze.

BUTTERY MASHED POTATOES

Start to finish: 45 minutes
Servings: 10

INGREDIENTS

- 4 pounds Yukon gold potatoes, peeled and halved
- Kosher salt
- 6 tablespoons butter
- ½ cup half-and-half
- 1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
- ½ teaspoon garlic powder
- Ground white pepper

DIRECTIONS

1. Place the potatoes in a large saucepan. Add enough cold water to cover by about 1 inch. Add 1 tablespoon of salt. Bring to a boil over medium-high heat and cook for 20 minutes, or until very tender but not falling apart.
2. Meanwhile, heat the oven to 350 F.
3. When the potatoes are just tender, drain them and spread them in an even layer on a rimmed baking sheet. Bake for 10 minutes. Return the potatoes to the saucepan. Add the butter, half-and-half, mustard and garlic powder. Mash the potatoes until smooth, then season with salt and white pepper.

SWEET-AND-SOUR GLAZED CARROTS AND GREEN BEANS

Start to finish: 30 minutes
Servings: 6

INGREDIENTS

- 4 ounces bacon
- 1 pound carrots, peeled and cut into 1/4-inch thick rounds
- 1 pound green beans, trimmed and cut into 2-inch lengths
- 2 tablespoons brown sugar
- 1 tablespoon molasses
- 1 to 2 tablespoons balsamic vinegar
- Kosher salt and ground black pepper

DIRECTIONS

1. In a large deep skillet over medium heat, cook the bacon until crisp. Transfer the bacon to a paper towel-line plate to drain, leaving the drippings in the pan. Once the bacon has cooled, crumble and set aside.
2. Return the skillet to the heat and add the carrots. Cook for 8 minutes, or until just starting to become tender. Add the green beans, then cook for another 8 to 10 minutes, or until the vegetables are tender. Add the brown sugar, molasses and vinegar. Stir until a thick glaze forms. Cook until bubbling all over and slightly thick and sticky. Season with salt and black pepper. Serve topped with the crumbled bacon.

Family traditions tough to break during Thanksgiving meal

DONNA B. STINNETT
COLUMNIST

My sister and I were having our annual telephone conversation about Thanksgiving dinner.

She and her husband are always very gracious to host those in our family who can make it for a midafternoon potluck (after the Macy's Thanksgiving Parade, the family Turkey Trot walk/run/bike and a timeout to watch the dog show on television), but the number of people has dwindled in recent years as the nieces and nephews have gotten married and new traditions have begun.

There are plenty of other family Thanksgiving dinners to work into the mix that day.

So the celebration of Thanksgiving is pretty casual in our extended family in regard to mandatory attendance. We know they are all giving thanks for our many, many family blessings no matter whose table they are sitting at, and if they happen to be at my sister's table, all the better.

Just like attendance, our menu is pretty flexible, too. She always makes the turkey and her wonderful dressing (which I can never duplicate no matter how many times she tells me how to make it) and the best mashed potatoes ever, and the rest of us bring side dishes, salads (with the only set-in-stone one being mom's lime Jell-O Brother Monin Salad) or appetizers.

A few days beforehand I always ask her the same question: "What do you want me to bring?"

She always answers the same thing: "Bring whatever you feel like making," and I like that answer because it gives me license to try out new recipes I've seen in food magazines, on food web sites or on television. It can be fun to ponder the possibilities and experiment.

We said our goodbyes, and I was already thinking about some recipes I'd read that might be good to add to the turkey and dressing.

Then I got a text message from my sister.

"If you can, bring the dish you made last year in that glass bowl. Was a great appetizer."

And luckily, considering it's a whole year later, I happen to actually remember what it was.

A few minutes later, I got another text message from her.

"Oh, and the grape salad," she said. "Why don't you bring that, too?"

And so it goes. Just when we think family tradition and routine have gone out the window, some things fall right back into place.

On Thursday, I will show up with grape salad and "the dish in that glass bowl."

But maybe, just maybe, something new.

Here are the recipes:

By Kasey Trenum

Time2Save

Q: Since the price of food has increased so much this year, I can only imagine how much it's going to cost to feed my brood Thanksgiving dinner. Do you have any suggestions as to how I could save some money this year?

A: Surprisingly enough, according to a recent article in The Huffington Post, the cost to prepare Thanksgiving dinners will remain steady this year thanks to many retailers who locked in their cost this spring before the drought drove up prices. Nevertheless, why pay more than you have to? Here are some ideas to help you reduce spending.

■ Keep your eyes peeled for coupons. The holiday season is one of the best times to find coupons in the store. Look for booklets, tear pads, blinkies and rebate offers for traditional Thanksgiving and Christmas fare.

You can also use our database — time2saveworkshops.com — to search for coupons for specific products. Simply type the product name into the database and a list of every available coupon will show.

■ Stock up early and save. In the weeks leading up to Thanksgiving, most traditional Thanksgiving grocery items will go on sale. Think in terms of individual ingredients instead of dishes, and scour your weekly grocery ad for those items.

For example, because I know I'll need Cool Whip for pecan pie, I stocked up on it last week when it was on sale and I had a coupon for $0.47.

I also stocked up on cheese for green bean casserole for $1 a block. Instead of paying upwards of $9 for two blocks of cheese and two tubs of Cool Whip, I only paid $3.

■ Don't be a turkey — take advantage of price matching and promotions. Over the next couple of weeks you'll see tons of different promotions and sales for turkey and ham. Pay attention to your weekly store ads to see what kind of incentives your store is offering.

You may be able to score a turkey for free just by shopping on certain days or buying qualifying items. One of my local stores is offering a free turkey with a new or transferred prescription or a flu shot.

■ Simplify your menu. Think about your family's favorite Thanksgiving dishes and pare your menu down accordingly. Tons of different dishes translate into additional grocery items and a higher grocery bill.

■ No need to fly solo — accept help. Take Aunt Sally up on her offer to bring her famous sweet potato casserole. Just because you are hosting this year's Thanksgiving shindig doesn't mean that you can't accept a little help.

When family or friends call and ask what they can bring, consider divvying up some of the responsibility. You could cut your expenses considerably.

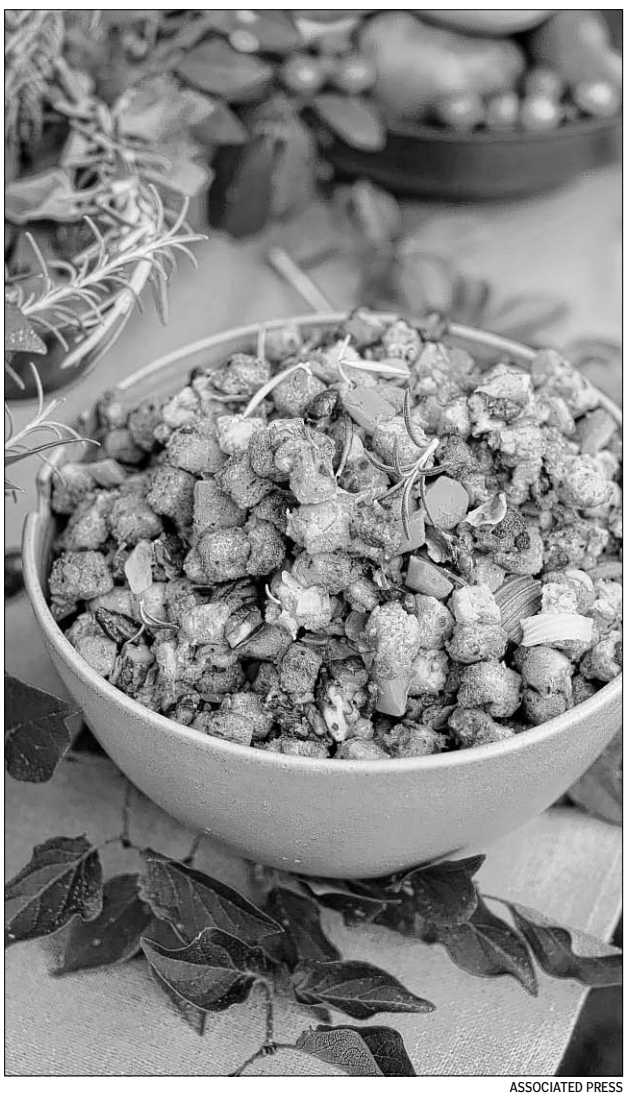

Sausage, pecan stuffing a classic

By Alison Ladman
Associated Press

When it comes to Thanksgiving stuffing, it's hard to get a more classic flavor combination than sausage and pecans. The result is a salty, nutty, sweet, crunchy and tender combination of flavors and textures.

For simplicity, we bake our stuffing in a side dish, but you could use it to stuff the bird, too.

Just be sure to adjust your cooking time and make sure the interior temperature reaches a safe 165 F.

SAUSAGE PECAN STUFFING

Start to finish: 1 hour
Servings: 8

INGREDIENTS

- 12 ounces loose Italian sausage meat (hot or sweet)
- 1 large yellow onion, chopped
- 2 carrots, finely diced
- 2 stalks celery, diced
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon ground black pepper
- ¾ cup chopped toasted pecans
- 1 12-ounce bag seasoned stuffing cubes
- 2 eggs
- 2½ cups low-sodium chicken or turkey broth

DIRECTIONS

1. Heat the oven to 350 F. Coat a large casserole dish or 9-by-13-inch baking pan with cooking spray.
2. In a large skillet medium-high heat, saute the sausage meat, breaking it up as it cooks and browns, about 8 to 10 minutes. Add the onion, carrots, celery, salt and black pepper. Cook for another 6 to 8 minutes, or until the onions are soft and translucent.
3. In a large bowl, combine the sausage mixture with the pecans and stuffing cubes. In a medium bowl, beat the eggs until foamy, then whisk in the broth. Pour the egg and broth mixture over the stuffing mixture and gently stir to thoroughly mix. Spoon into the prepared casserole dish or baking pan and bake for 30 minutes, or until browned and cooked through.

Salad should stand out from other dishes

By Alison Ladman
Associated Press

To stand out in a Thanksgiving spread, a salad must be bold and flavorful.

Yet it should not compete with the other flavors on the table.

To strike this delicate balance, we created this easy arugula salad that is topped with spiced and sauteed pears and goat cheese, then drizzled with a pomegranate-Dijon vinaigrette.

ARUGULA PEAR SALAD WITH POMEGRANATE VINAIGRETTE AND GOAT CHEESE

Start to finish: 15 minutes
Servings: 10

INGREDIENTS

- 1 tablespoon butter
- ½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 3 large pears, cored and sliced
- ½ cup dried cranberries
- ½ cup sliced dried apricots
- ½ cup pomegranate juice
- 2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon ground black pepper
- Pinch of ground allspice
- ¼ cup olive oil
- 1 10-ounce container baby arugula
- 4 ounces soft goat cheese, crumbled

DIRECTIONS

1. In a large skillet over medium-high heat, combine the butter and cinnamon. When the butter has melted, add the pears and saute until they are softened, about 5 minutes. Add the cranberries and apricots, then cook for another minute. Set aside off the heat.
2. In a blender, combine the pomegranate juice, red wine vinegar, sugar, Dijon mustard, salt, pepper, allspice and olive oil. Blend until well combined.
3. In a large bowl, arrange the arugula. Top the greens with the sauteed pear mixture, then the crumbled goat cheese. Serve the vinaigrette on the side.

Set your budget before holiday shopping

AMANDA HARDY

COLUMNIST

While the holidays are a time of celebration and strengthening and renewing relationships with family and friends, they can also be a time of financial burden as we struggle to fulfill the wish lists of our families and friends.

This is especially true this year as financial hardships are at the forefront of everyone's minds. For thousands of families struggling through the current economic climate, holiday gift giving may seem like an impossible task.

Fortunately, there are several things we can do to limit holiday spending. Having a budget and closely following it is a must.

Make a list of people you would like to purchase gifts for and estimate the amount you would like to spend on each person. You may want to include in your budget any additional expenses that may occur during the holiday season.

These expenditures can include mailing supplies, meals, parties, travel, decorations, donations and much more. Take your normal monthly expenses into account as you build your holiday budget.

Do not forget about monthly bills, such as utilities, housing, food, insurance and credit card payments, that are due regardless.

If your estimated gift expenditures exceed your holiday budget, you may want to reduce the amount of money you plan to spend on each person on your list. There are several low and no costs gifts you can give. Lean on your talents and pull together your resources.

Give a gift of a homecooked meal or baked goods. Create your own holiday decorations to give as gifts. Make gift certificates in which you complete a task for someone at a later date. Some people may just enjoy spending time with you.

Hosting a potluck supper is a good opportunity to engage others while keeping costs to a minimum.

If your costs continue to exceed your budget, you may want to re-evaluate your list and remove some people if necessary.

There's no rule that says gifts have to be opened on a certain day. Cut out pictures of items you intend to buy individuals on your list and place them in an envelope for them to open during the holidays. Purchase the gifts for them during post-holiday sales.

In addition to saving money, this practice has several benefits.

You will be able to gauge if you are buying something they will enjoy and use. They may prefer something of similar value. Also, you can have those individuals accompany you while you shop.

If you are buying them clothes, they can try them on and choose the style and color they want.

Try to limit your credit use during the holiday season. If you must use a credit card, keep all purchases on as few cards as possible so you can easily keep track of your expenditures. Try to pay off your credit card balance as quickly as possible to keep the amount of interest you have to pay at a minimum.

After the holidays are finished this year, planning early for next year may be beneficial. Post-holiday sales are always a great time to stock up on gifts for next year.

Planning ahead also gives you the opportunity to spread out your holiday gift purchases over several months.

Advice

Ultimatum will disclose boyfriend's true feelings

Dear Amy: I started a relationship with a work colleague about four months ago. I am aware that he already has a girlfriend in a long-distance relationship. They have been together for four years.

What started as a mere physical relationship has turned into something more emotional for us, and we repeatedly say and demonstrate that we love each other.

While I am happy when I am with him, it is always heartbreaking when I catch him speaking (or texting) with his girlfriend. I know I am such a tramp to steal another woman's boyfriend, but the love I have for him is genuine. He keeps saying that he wants to be with me, but I can't see this happening in the near future.

Last week I decided to take a "break" to think everything through. I said that I will be happy if he's happy, regardless of his decision, but I am in doubt whether I can handle his decision if he chooses to be with his girlfriend.

I do not know what to do and (or) how to handle the situation. Can you help?

— Betwixt

Dear Betwixt: It's been a long time since I have seen someone self-identify as "a tramp." I feel your pain — I really do — because if you are a Jean Harlow, man-stealing tramp, then the guy you are dating is a one-man Bradley Cooper movie.

You don't say you are engaged in two relationships at once, so he gets the bag-of-spit award. I'm not going to sugarcoat it for you. If this guy loved you, like really, really loved you, he'd ditch his other relationship the minute he realized it.

Your strong emotional feelings have opened your eyes and clarified your intentions. This is high-stakes stuff. Lay it out there in a way that's uncompromising and all about you.

If you want to be in a monogamous relationship with him, then issue an ultimatum. Prepare to be dramatically and tenderly alone. Stock up on Ben and Jerry's and listen to Joni Mitchell's "Blue" album until your sadness passes. And it will pass.

Dear Amy: "Rachel" wrote to you about a "stinky" individual at her gym. She wanted to know how to best respond to this.

While I tend to ignore the majority of the odorous athletes at my gym, there was one time I didn't. I was on an elliptical machine next to a large gentleman whose body odor was extremely offensive. I couldn't move to another machine.

When my workout was finished I quietly and as unobtrusively as possible said, "You might want to look into a stronger deodorant."

He was shocked and embarrassed. Perhaps his nose had become desensitized, because he seemed genuinely and blissfully unaware of the issue. He was mortified and quickly apologized.

While I "took one for the team" and said something, I will never forget the look on his face. I felt terrible. I took this as a lesson in tolerance.

— More Tolerant

Dear Tolerant: You obviously regret this discreetly expressed suggestion, but I wonder if in the long term it might have been a good thing for the gentleman in question.

I'd like to hear from people who have been "called out" for noticeable odors. This is a perennially awkward issue, and it would be great to learn what works from both sides.

Dear Amy: You answered a writer's question with, "You should not institute rules for your guests to follow." Maybe not, but making politics off-limits can be a wise idea.

When the outcome of the 2000 presidential election was still undetermined by Thanksgiving that year, our family hostess posted a "Politics Free Zone" sign on the front door.

Truthfully, most of the guests were relieved that the ongoing electoral dispute would not dominate our holiday dinner. The policy has remained in force over the years, and our holiday gatherings have been full of fun and memory-filled conversation and fewer awkward moments.

— Barbara

Dear Barbara: I grant you an official waiver and cast my vote for your idea.

Geese droppings ruining beautiful, landscaped yard

Dear Heloise: My husband and I have a beautiful landscaped lawn connected to a quarry filled with water. We have one problem: geese!

They enjoy the quarry, too, but several times a day they come out onto our lawn and leave droppings. Is there any solution to end this geese problem?

— R.V. in Ohio

Dear R.V.: Geese, while fun and amusing to watch, can leave a big mess. There are several options to fix the problem. You can try things like balloons, flags or scarecrows, which need to be moved often, as the birds may get used to them.

Another way to go is a physical barrier, like a fence. You can run a small fence around the area to keep the geese off your lawn. The geese will still have access to the quarry but will be prevented from going any further.

There are products on the market from noisemakers to chemical deterrents, but most important is do not feed the geese!

— Heloise

Send a money-saving or timesaving hint to Heloise, P.O. Box 795000, San Antonio, TX 78279-5000, or you can fax it to 1-210-HELOISE or email it to Heloise@Heloise.com.

God still loves us, despite our flaws

Dear Dr. Graham: If God knows everything, then doesn't that mean He must have known the human race was going to sin against Him? Why, then, did He even create us?

If I'd been God, I just wouldn't have bothered. Or maybe He didn't know what we were going to do.

— J.D.

Dear J.D.: You're right when you say God knows everything — and yes, He even knew that Adam and Eve would give in to Satan's temptation and rebel against Him. God warned them in advance what would happen — but they did it anyway.

Why, then, did God create us? The Bible doesn't give us a detailed answer — but it does tell us that love is at the very center of God's nature.

"God is love," the Bible says (1 John 4:16). But God's love needed to be expressed, and so He created individuals He could love — and who could love Him in return. The Bible says, "This is love: not that we loved God, but that he loved us" (1 John 4:10).

We weren't meant to be puppets or cold lumps of clay; God put within us the capacity to love Him. But something went wrong — and that "something" was sin. Instead of loving God, we loved only ourselves. Instead of freely serving God, we became slaves to our own lusts and desires. Our relationship with God was broken, and death entered our lives.

But here is the remarkable thing: God still loved us — and He still loves us! He loves us so much that even before we were created, He planned to send His Son into the world to bring us back to Himself. Open your heart and life to Jesus Christ, and discover the joy of knowing God personally — both today, and forever.

Sunlight not vital when taking vitamin D supplement

Dear Drs. Donohue and Roach: I take a vitamin D every day, but I also put sunscreen on my exposed skin when I go outdoors. Won't the sunscreen interfere with the effects of the vitamin D?

— L.P.

Dear L.P.: Low vitamin D is increasingly being diagnosed, and has been implicated in many conditions. What is absolutely clear is that vitamin D is necessary for proper bone health, and many Americans — particularly those who live in the northern two-thirds of the country (and all Canadians!) are at higher risk.

Darker-skinned people also are at higher risk for low vitamin D levels, and low vitamin D has been shown to be a reversible cause of weakness in the elderly.

Preliminary studies have linked low vitamin D to cancer, but it is too early to say whether replacing vitamin D will reduce cancer risk.

Most people make their own vitamin D with a short period of sun exposure to their face and hands, and sunscreen does indeed prevent the skin from making the active form of vitamin D in sunlight.

Since you're taking supplemental vitamin D (in the form of vitamin D-3), the sunlight isn't necessary.

You are, in effect, bypassing the skin's involvement.

Dear Drs. Donohue and Roach: I take methotrexate and Remicade for rheumatoid arthritis. Both the doctor and the pharmacist have told me not to drink alcohol with these medications.

Recently, a nurse told me that moderate drinking is OK. I am not a big drinker, but occasionally I enjoy wine with a dinner out. However, I don't want to do anything that will affect the good results I am getting. Do you know why alcohol is prohibited?

— C.M.

Dear C.M.: The concern is damage to your liver, which is the major toxicity for methotrexate and is possible with Remicade.

I won't contradict your doctor and pharmacist in your particular case.

However, an occasional glass of wine (meaning a few times per month, and never more than two at a time) is unlikely to cause most people harm.

Your doctor should be monitoring your liver via blood tests, so it may be that in your case, you already have some early signs of liver involvement from the medicines.

You should ask him or her if a glass of wine once or twice a month would be a problem for you.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 20). It's amazing how many people don't take action. You'll be different from most. You see an opportunity to improve yourself that seems almost too obvious to be real. It is real, and it will work for you.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 21). Family members need you in ways they aren't saying. It's as though they expect you to read their minds. Can you blame them? You've proved to be pretty good at this in the past.

CANCER: (June 22-July 22). Having a good laugh at least once a day is a stress reducer. You may need to turn up the prescription to once every three hours over the next few days to combat environmental tension producers.

LEO: (July 23-Aug. 22). There's so much going on in your mind now that you'll have to trick yourself into staying present. Your sign mate Steve Martin once tweeted, "It's a beautiful day where I am. I only wish I were where I am."

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Usually, you live by the mantra, "A place for everything and everything in its place." Yet there are some new additions to your possessions that have yet to find a good home. Figure it out today; you've a busy week ahead.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Though your family hasn't always gotten along, you feel that if you hold the intention of harmony, fun and togetherness, it will be enough to inspire peace. Indeed, your neutral, easygoing attitude will be contagious.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You'll give all of your energy to the things you want and simply ignore the rest. This produces a heavenly mood that you can ride into what promises to be a lovely evening.

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Many people search for love without success. The fact that you have people in your life whom you love and who love you is one of the great blessings of a lifetime – and something you won't take for granted today.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Someone will offer you a lot of advice. If you take this as a challenge, you quickly will get bogged down by the magnitude of it all. Instead, pick and choose what applies best.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The happy, easy energy you exude will open doors. You don't have to walk through those doors, but it's a free and wonderful feeling to know that you have the option.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 20). Just when you think you know what you're looking for in a partner, someone will come along with a very different profile, and you'll be strangely drawn in. This relationship will broaden your horizons.

Families improvise to make Thanksgiving most memorable

"One of the very nicest things about life is the way we must regularly stop whatever it is we are doing and devote our attention to eating."

— Luciano Pavarotti and William Wright, "Pavarotti: My Own Story"

By Jane Brzozowski

"Chicken Soup for the Soul: Food and Love"

What a year it had been! Our 12-year-old daughter Sally had been diagnosed with leukemia in early winter, and we had all been thrown into a world that we did not know even existed: one filled with chemotherapy, complications and hospitalizations.

When Sally developed a fever the week before Thanksgiving, we were all disappointed to go back to the hospital, but hopeful that she'd be home for the big feast we had planned.

Her grandmother would be flying in from California, and the menu had been developed and debated and amended on the phone by everyone in the family: Broccoli casserole or green bean casserole? How about both? Cranberry sauce with whole berries or jellied? Apples in the stuffing? Now the menu was on hold as we headed back to the pediatric ward.

The detour was easier to accept when Sally's hospital friend Mary, unlucky enough to have a fever of her own, was admitted to the room across the hall. Both girls were out of danger but needed to be monitored.

As the holiday got closer we could smell the homemade desserts in our minds and picture the table laden with food and family, but going home seemed less likely.

Then, on Thanksgiving morning, the doctors gave us great news: They would give Sally and Mary a "day pass" to David's House, the home-away-from-home for sick children and their families, next to the hospital.

This felt like a "Get Out of Jail Free" card to all of us. Our two families hurried out in teams to the grocery store and to check out the cooking facilities.

David's House is a warm, welcoming place, and the kitchen is a cook's dream, with multiple ovens, range tops, refrigerators and surfaces to prepare food, all in a light-filled space. Mary's parents and sister, my husband and Sally's sister Kathleen pitched in to make the best meal ever.

My mother arrived to the sounds of pots and pans and running water, and the smell of chopped onions and minced garlic, followed by the delicious scent of turkey just beginning to roast.

While the food cooked, I went to my car and pulled out all the decorations that had been planned for our home and had been riding around in my trunk since I bought them. Sally, Mary and I set up multiple elegant tables to fit us all.

With so many handy cooks, the food all came out at the same time, and we arranged it as a gorgeous buffet on the long counters. It looked like something from a magazine layout: the huge turkey with the crisp golden skin as the centerpiece, the roasted fall vegetables in beautiful shades of orange and yellow, the creamy gravy and what seemed like every kind of cranberry sauce there is.

What was even better was how it smelled — like home! The warmth and gratitude of this celebration that we had pulled out of nowhere seemed to mix with the rich smells of the food that we prepared all that afternoon.

Just then, the front door opened and an older couple and a younger man walked in, each wearing a look of shock and exhaustion. The young man explained that his wife had gone into early labor with their twins and needed to be hospitalized unexpectedly. He and his wife's parents had been directed to David's House as a place to stay for the night. Their plans had been to check in before going out to find a turkey sandwich somewhere. We led them into the kitchen where, to their great surprise, our beautiful homemade banquet was ready and hot. "Welcome!" we said, "to Thanksgiving!"

The three families sat down together for a meal that we would all remember long after Sally and Mary were cured. It was not the Thanksgiving that we had planned or expected, but it was one that we would never forget.

CHUCK STINNETT
BUSINESS EDITOR

One year after raising its profile by opening a prominent new main local office on Green Street, Independence Bank has become the No. 2 bank in Henderson as measured by local deposits for the first time.

Meanwhile, Old National Bank's acquisition of the accounts of the failed Integra Bank in 2011, particularly in Webster and Union counties, helped make it the No. 1 bank in the Tri-county by that same measure, passing three other institutions.

Those are the highlights of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.'s annual report on local deposits, including where each bank stands in market share. The deposits include money in checking accounts, certificates of deposit and savings accounts.

In Henderson County, Independence Bank's deposits increased $24 million, reaching $154 million, from June 30, 2011, to June 30, 2012, according to the FDIC's Summary of Deposits report.

That 18.5 percent growth rate was more than enough to propel Independence past Fifth Third Bank, which for years had ranked No. 2 in market share in Henderson County.

Ohio Valley Financial Group remained No. 1 with $195 million in deposits, up $3 million from the previous year.

OV's deposits were followed by Independence ($154 million), Fifth Third ($145 million), Old National ($114 million), the Bank of Henderson ($60 million) and US Bank ($13 million).

All six commercial banks with offices in Henderson County saw deposits increase over the past year.

In all, the six banks had $681 million on deposit in mid-2012, up $39 million or 6.1 percent from a year ago.

That growth rate was more than double that of Kentucky overall. Statewide, bank deposits increased $1.85 billion or nearly 2.7 percent.

Banks are paying miniscule returns on deposits — the national average for a one-year CD is 0.30 percent, according to BankRate.com. But area bankers have said wary consumers have been parking money in bank accounts, which are insured by the FDIC up to $250,000, because of concerns regarding the economy or risks in the stock market. Similarly, commercial customers have been holding more cash as they bank against uncertainties in matters ranging from the presidential election to the outcome of some major national tax issues.

But in the Tri-county, changes in market share were affected by some local issues.

Most significantly, in July 2011, the former Evansville-based Integra Bank failed. Its accounts were acquired by Old National.

That had a relatively small impact in Henderson, where Integra had operated one office with just $9 million in deposits, ranking it last with only a 1.3 percent share of the market.

However, the acquisition of Integra's accounts gave Old National its first presence in Webster County and enlarged its market share in Union County.

Old National was unable to retain all of the Integra deposits it acquired in Webster County, presumably because some customers moved accounts after Old National closed former Integra offices in Poole and Clay. Integra's $57 million in deposits in Webster County as of mid-2011 shrank to $40 million by mid-2012 at the remaining offices in Sebree and Providence.

Still, those $40 million in deposits in Webster County, combined with $9 million in deposit growth in Henderson County and a $30 million surge in Union County, pushed its Tri-county deposit total to $263 million, raising it from No. 4 to No. 1.

However, the banking industry remains fragmented in the three-county area. None of the nine commercial banks with offices in the area holds as much as 22 percent of the Tri-county's deposits, and the top five banks have market shares ranging from 13 percent to 21 percent.

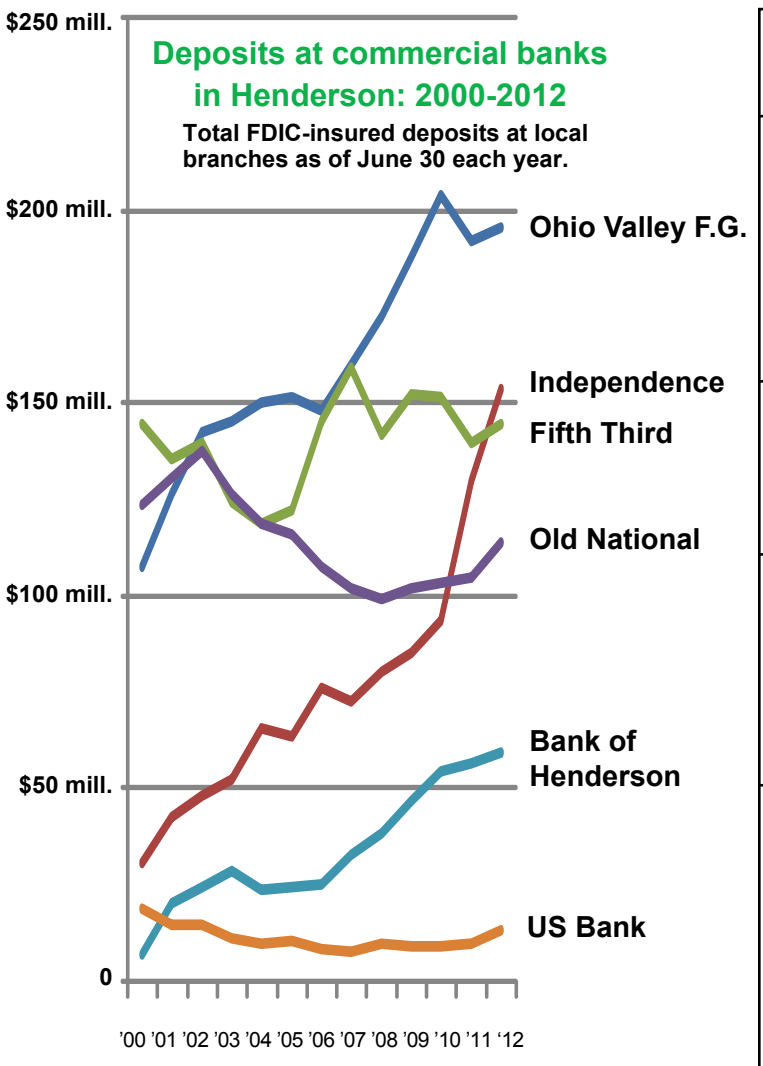

Across the three counties, bank deposits grew $73 million from mid-2011 to mid-2012, reaching more than $1.2 billion as of June 30, 2012.

In addition to the $39 million increase at banks in Henderson County, deposits grew $6 million in Union County and $29 million in Webster County.

On a percentage basis, deposits were up 6.3 percent in the Tri-county.

Wal-mart, Target offer differing holiday sales forecasts

By Anne D'innocenzio
AP retail writer

NEW YORK — This holiday season, the biggest discount chains in the U.S. will tell the tale of two very different shoppers: those that have and those that have not.

Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the world's largest retailer, last week acknowledged that its low-income shoppers continue to struggle in the economy and issued an outlook for the fourth quarter — which encompasses the holiday shopping period — that falls below Wall Street estimates.

On the same day, its smaller rival Target Corp., which caters to more affluent shoppers, said it expects results during the quarter to exceed the Street's projections.

The two discounters offer valuable insight into how Americans will spend in November and December, a period that's traditionally the busiest shopping period of the year.

Some merchants depend on the holiday shopping season for up to 40 percent of their annual sales, but economists watch the period closely to get a temperature reading on the overall mood of American consumers.

The forecasts seem to confirm a trend that has taken shape during the economic downturn. Well-heeled shoppers spend more freely as the economy begins to show new signs of life, while consumers in the lower income brackets continue to hold tight to their purse strings even as the housing and stock markets rebound.

Wal-Mart and Target both are discounters, but they cater to different customers. Wal-Mart, which says its customers' average household income ranges from $30,000 to $60,000, hammers its low-price message and focuses on stocking basics like T-shirts and underwear along with household goods.

But Target, whose customers have a median household income of $64,000 a year, is known for carrying discounted designer clothes and home decor under the same roof as detergent and dishwashing liquid.

Even the tone that the retailers struck last week was different.

Charles Holley, Wal-Mart's chief financial officer, told reporters during a call that the retailer's customers still are worried about high unemployment and higher basic costs for things like gas. He said he also worries that they also will have some anxiety over big tax increases and spending cuts — known as the "fiscal cliff" — that will take effect in January unless Congress and the White House reach a budget deal by then.

"Macroeconomic conditions continue to pressure our customers," Holley said.

Meanwhile, Gregg Steinhafel, Target's chairman and president, told investors: "We feel good about our ability to deliver inspiring merchandise, most-wanted gifts and unbeatable value, while also generating expected profitability."

The fortunes of the two retailers have changed during the economic downturn.

Wal-Mart at first fared well during the slowdown as affluent shoppers traded down to its stores. But the company eventually began to lose some of its core low-income shoppers in the process.

The company, based in Bentonville, Ark., posted nine consecutive quarters of revenue declines in its U.S. namesake business as it moved away from its lowest prices strategy and got rid of thousands of basic items its core customers covet in an effort to de-clutter the stores.

Replace computer software that bogs down system

The most common complaint I hear from people calling for computer service is that their system is sluggish, slow to boot up and unresponsive.

While the usual culprits (viruses and spyware) often factor in, sometimes even virus-free computers run slower than they should.

If you have a decent, malware-free system that's underperforming, you may get noticeable improvement by replacing some of its resource-sucking programs — antivirus software or media players — with less bloated alternatives.

Norton and McAfee are the most well known antivirus programs around.

Their manufacturers have relationships with most computer distributors, resulting in the vast majority of prebuilt systems arriving at the user's door with one of these software packages preinstalled.

Unfortunately, Norton and McAfee are massive programs that hog system resources.

Heavy-handed online monitoring can lead to slow-as-molasses Internet surfing; in some cases, it can restrict access to certain sites or block a user's Web access entirely.

Consider switching to Microsoft Security Essentials, developed by Microsoft for Windows. It's free and automatically updates itself against the latest viruses and malware. It's designed to run silently in the background when your PC is idle, so it won't bother you.

Or, if you're not enamored with the "in-house" option, consider AVG Technologies' two free antivirus programs — http://free.avg.com and www.avast.com/free-antivirus-download — which will fit the needs of most users.

The programs protect against most malware and use fewer resources than Norton or McAfee.

Adobe Reader is the most widely used PDF reader around, but it's also one of the slowest on the market because it takes up more than 100MB of drive space and drains your system's resources.

Many websites instruct users to install Adobe Reader and include links to download it, though in most cases it came preinstalled on the machine.

While some advanced PDF functions may work best with Adobe — like watermarks, for example — you have alternatives that can quickly and easily handle basic PDF viewing.

Foxit Reader is another popular option that takes less than 1 MB to download and lets you open, view and print all types of PDFs.

Media players also can be resource hogs.

For instance, iTunes offers an easy way to get your music and videos on your iPod, but you may regret making it your default media player.

It's slow to launch and run, and it nags with frequent pop-up notices to download updates to itself and its partner program, QuickTime.

Save iTunes for your Apple gadgets.

Use any number of other media players to listen to your music — even the default Windows Media Player is faster to load and less of a drain on your system's resources.

To get all of the organizational tools you're used to from iTunes, check out MediaMonkey, a free media management program. Play MP3s, audiobooks, podcasts and videos, sync with your mobile devices and even burn CDs and DVDs, all the while keeping your media collection in order.

MediaMonkey's site claims it can "manage 100,000+ music and video files without bogging down." It supports most file types and can convert file types to enable syncing across devices.

With a few software swaps, you could be singing a different tune about your system's speed and responsiveness.

New Nexus tablet showcases Google media play

■ App store works just like iTunes

By Anick Jesdanun
AP technology writer

NEW YORK — When I first turned on Google's new tablet computer, I immediately thought of it as a mere conduit to Google services.

Besides giving you quick access to Gmail and YouTube, the Nexus 10 steers you to digital movies, books and other content available for sale through Google's online Play store.

Because of that, I wasn't thinking of the Nexus 10 as an alternative to Apple's general-purpose iPad — even with a price tag that's $100 cheaper, starting at $399. It took more thought and time with the Nexus to change that perception. After all, apps available for Android smartphones work on the tablet as well.

Still, the Nexus really shines when it comes to media — especially content bought through Google.

For the past year, Google has been trying to challenge Apple and Amazon by selling digital content.

The Play store is Google's version of iTunes for Apple devices. There, you can get a variety of apps, some free and some for a small fee. You can buy or rent movies and obtain books, magazines and music. Google isn't satisfied with building search engines and selling ads. It wants a bigger role in the digital economy.

Over the summer, Google came out with a 7-inch tablet called the Nexus 7. Just as Apple is making an iPad Mini that's about the size of the Nexus 7, Google is now selling a larger version of the Nexus, about the size of Apple's regular iPad. It starts shipping this week.

On the Nexus 10, icons at the bottom of the screen emphasize Google's media products available through Play. Click on a picture of film to watch movies, headphones to listen to music and a book to, well, read books. Another icon gets you to the Play store to obtain more content and apps.

The Nexus has a rubberized back and fits more snugly on my lap than the metal-backed iPad. In my hands, I don't feel as if the Nexus would slip out and crash on to the hard floor, as I continually do with the iPad.

There are front-facing speakers going up and down both sides of the Nexus, compared with just one tucked in a corner on the back of an iPad. You feel more immersed watching video with sound coming right at you from the entire device. I hadn't considered that a problem on the iPad, but I began to notice it once I played video on the tablets side by side.

The screen measures 10.1 inches diagonally, which is more than the iPad's 9.7 inches. But the screen isn't any larger because while it's about an inch wider in horizontal mode, it's also about a half-inch less in height. This works well for widescreen content, which completely fills the screen. On the iPad, the latest movies and TV shows often have black bars, no matter how you hold the tablet. In some cases, you might see the sides of video cut off to fit the space, as I did watching this week's episode of "Revenge" on Hulu. Again, I hadn't considered that a problem on the iPad, until I began to notice it.

What makes the tablet's shape good for movies makes it less-than-ideal for magazines, though. There's wasted space on the top and the bottom for magazines on the Nexus. But I watch TV shows and movies online more often than I read magazines digitally, so I'll let it slide.

As for books, text on the Nexus' screen comes out sharp. News sites and apps also look nice. The Nexus has a screen resolution of 300 pixels per inches, slightly better than the 264 ppi for the latest full-size iPad (which itself is far better than the 132 ppi on the older iPad 2 model still available).

ASSOCIATED PRESS

This undated image provided by Google shows Google's new 10-inch tablet, the Nexus 10.

True, there are other tablets designed as media players, too. Amazon.com Inc.'s Kindle Fire and Barnes and Noble Inc.'s Nook HD come to mind, and both have larger versions out this month. But neither has the diversity of apps available for the Nexus and other full-fledge Android devices (The Kindle and the Nook run on modified versions of Android and restrict apps to what's available through their own online stores).

So what does that mean?

Apps on my Samsung Galaxy S III smartphone automatically appear on the Nexus 10 after signing in with the same Google account. I'll note that the Nexus 10 is also made by Samsung Electronics Co., even though it's branded Google.

Three of my apps, for AccuWeather, Citibank and Dunkin' Donuts, aren't compatible for unknown reasons. But those I use most often — Facebook, Instagram, Foursquare and a slew of other weather apps — all work on the Nexus. The companion app for the TV show "Dexter" also works, allowing me to play trivia games and watch video clips.

Not all apps have been specifically adapted for the tablet's larger screen, but they take advantage of the entire screen, nonetheless, thanks to the way Android lets software programmers build their apps in modules. All the content gets blown up and still looks decent.

Apple's store has a far wider selection of apps, though, including a half-dozen apps for exhibits at the American Museum of Natural History in New York. A search on Play comes up with only one.

The Nexus comes with the latest version of the Android operating system, version 4.2. It introduces a new feature for sharing tablets, the way family members can share Windows and Mac computers while keeping personalized settings. You no longer have to fight with a kid who constantly changes the volume or moves apps around. Now, just sign in as separate users.

The Nexus is a tad lighter, while the iPad promises longer battery life and has an option for cellular broadband for $130 more, plus the cost of data plans. Neither has a slot to expand memory with SD cards. Both have two cameras — 5 megapixels on the back for taking photos and video, and a lower-resolution one on the front for videoconferencing.

The iPad remains king among tablets, with its ease of use, variety of apps and dominance in the market. But challengers such as Google offer choice. The Nexus 10 is a good choice if you already have an Android phone and use a lot of Google services. That's especially true if you also watch a lot of movies and TV shows, but don't want to be limited to that.

Take vow to avoid debt when holiday shopping

■ Black Friday deals will be tempting

By Dave Carpenter
AP personal finance writer

CHICAGO — Black Friday deals are starting early this year, and that means more pressure to spend spend spend.

As the holiday shopping season expands and retailers make impulse buys ever-easier via smartphone and otherwise, consumers have to be extra-disciplined to avoid money trouble.

Many are willing to indulge. The National Retail Federation forecasts holiday sales to rise 4.1 percent to $586.1 billion this year, a bigger increase than usual over the last 10 years. Shoppers are expected to spend an average $749.51 in November and December, with many shelling out much more.

Weak economy? What weak economy?

Unfortunately, many will take months to pay off the goodies they bought for loved ones or (shh) themselves at doorbuster deals and other special offers.

Among the potential debt traps for the unwary this year:

■ Special Black Friday shopping hours actually begin on Thursday at major retailers, even as early as 8 a.m. on Thanksgiving Day. Ramping up the temptation level, websites tracking Black Friday sales have been sending emails with "leaked" sales specials since Halloween.

■ Some credit-card issuers have mailed blank checks for their customers to use, just in time for the holiday shopping crush. Interest rates on these cash advances can run 20 percent or more if you don't pay off your card within the prescribed period.

■ Card issuers increasingly are attaching spending requirements to generous rewards and bonus offers they dangle ahead of Black Friday, making you spend with their card in order to earn them. That's sinking a much bigger hook into the consumer than the past trend of merchants offering peeks at their sales in exchange for Facebook "likes."

"Opening a new credit card just to get a 'deal' is never a good idea," says Jeff Somogyi, an editor at deal aggregator Dealnews.com. "Getting into a new financial entanglement just to get a jump on Black Friday sales is probably an even worse idea."

This doesn't mean you have to shun all holiday sales in order to remain financially responsible.

But remember: Smart spending for the holidays isn't all about finding the best deals. It's important to be on your toes to prevent Black Friday and the days surrounding it from dooming you to too much debt.

Some tips to keep spending under control and debt, if any, to a minimum:

1. Have a plan: Make a list of who you're shopping for, what items you hope to find and how much you intend to spend on each person. Stick to it!

Your plan should call for you to start your shopping online, at least to compare prices and look for deals before you head for the stores. Avoid impulse purchases. And don't wait until the last minute to start shopping; it's a sure prescription to spend more.

2. Limit credit card use: Keep the use of credit to a minimum. If you must use it, put your charges on one credit card — the one with the lowest rate if you carry a balance. Remove all other cards from your purse or wallet.

Don't apply for store cards just to snag one-time discounts. The ideal approach it to not charge a single item unless you can repay in full when your next bill arrives. At least set a target date to zero out the balance before you run one up.

This image provided by Macy's shows Macy's Black Friday App. Starting last week, customers have been able to view Black Friday specials on their mobile device and create personal shopping lists they can edit and share. Macy's customers will also be sent notifications on unadvertised specials while they're in the store on Black Friday. Also, the app will let them know exactly where the specials are located at each of the locations so shoppers don't have to be running around aimlessly to find them.

3. Beware of special card offers: In addition to rewards and bonus deals, issuers are tempting consumers by offering incentives such as no-interest balance transfers, extra perks by meeting certain spending levels and increased cash back in specified categories. Resist the bait.

Companies know that many won't; that's the reason total consumer credit-card debt is close to $600 billion. "No deal is a good deal if you can't afford it," says Gail Cunningham of the National Foundation for Credit Counseling.

4. Use layaway: Take advantage of the resurgence of holiday layaway programs. Retailers from Kmart and Sears to Toys R Us and Wal-Mart have lowered or waived fees this year that shoppers pay to participate in these interest-free, pay-over-time programs.

With stores eager not to lose customers to the competition, debt-conscious consumers can snag gifts at attractive prices while not having to pay an extra fee just to avoid buying with their credit cards.

5. Get creative: Find it difficult to stick to a holiday spending budget? Give gift cards and make something personal to go with them. Or give experiences instead of "stuff" — perhaps a shared hike, nature outing or special home-cooked meal.

Or volunteer together at a soup kitchen, homeless shelter or nursing home if your gift recipient doesn't want more material items, suggests Pamela Yellen, a financial services consultant and personal finance author. The gifts people remember the most, as she points out, are often free.

'Boomers' embracing electric cars

Scripps newspapers

Morna Erwin considers herself an "eco nerd." That's why the retired attorney was happy to buy one of the first Nissan Leafs in Knoxville, Tenn., last year to support the fledgling electric car industry.

Her husband, Lee, had a different approach.

"I will adopt green technology if it makes economic sense," the administrative law judge said.

Their 2011 Leaf has worked on both fronts.

The industry is growing, with hundreds of new jobs being added in Tennessee as production of the vehicles is set to begin at Nissan's Smyrna plant by mid-December.

As affluent baby boomers, the couple also fits the demographic pattern for most Leaf customers.

"It's funny because people might assume that the market would be for young people who are into technology," Morna said. "What they're finding is that it's appealing to a little more of an older market."

She's 59, and he's 66.

According to Nissan, the average Leaf customer is a college-educated boomer with an average income of $125,000 a year who owns a home with garage space for their car's charger.

Automakers betting on pickup sales growth

■ Home building, age of trucks on road key factors

By Dee-Ann Durbin and Tom Krisher
AP auto writers

DETROIT – Auto companies are betting on a surge in pickup sales now that home building is on the rise.

Chrysler said Thursday it is adding 1,000 workers to its Ram pickup factory because it sees higher demand for the redesigned truck. Ford and General Motors also say truck sales are climbing fast after several years of small but steady growth.

Truck sales rise or fall with home construction, since they're the vehicle of choice for contractors and construction crews. And there are growing signs that home construction and prices are in the midst of a steady recovery, said Tom Libby, lead North American forecasting analyst for the Polk research firm.

For example, government data shows builders started construction on homes and apartments at the fastest pace in more than four years in September. They also requested the most building permits in four years, a sign that many are confident that home sales will continue growing. Another encouraging sign: home prices are rising in many markets.

"Almost every day there's another report of a positive measure," Libby said.

Another reason sales could surge is the record age of trucks currently on the road. Ford Americas President Mark Fields said this week that 53 percent of full-size pickups are now older than 10 years and 27 percent are more than 15 years. Many of those trucks will have to be replaced soon.

"You can see there's a lot of pent-up demand out there," Fields said at an industry conference. "There could be a lot of opportunity."

Fields said full-size trucks have accounted for 11 percent of U.S. sales since 2009. That market share shot up rapidly in October to 13 percent, according to Citi analyst Itay Michaeli. He expects demand at that level for the next few months, especially since gas prices have eased.

Ford's top U.S. sales analyst Erich Merkle wouldn't say how much Ford has increased truck production to meet demand.

But Ford's overall car and truck production is up 7 percent in the fourth quarter to 725,000. As of Nov. 1, it had 238,000 pickups in its inventory, up from 192,000 at the same time last year, indicating it's expecting a jump in sales. The F-Series pickup is the country's best-selling vehicle.

Chrysler CEO Sergio Marchionne is predicting higher Ram sales because of the truck itself. The new Ram, which just hit the market, can get up to 25 miles per gallon on the highway and has a host of new technology, including a system that automatically shuts down the truck at stop lights to save fuel. Ram sales were up 20 percent in October over the same month last year.

"I expect it to do really well," Marchionne said after a speech at Chrysler's Mack 1 Engine Plant in Detroit Thursday.

New pickups from GM will also pique buyers' interest. GM plans to release more details about the Chevrolet Silverado and GMC Sierra next month.

TOM & RAY MAGLIOZZI

CLICK & CLACK

Dear Tom and Ray: My dad has a 1962 Studebaker Hawk that he bought three years ago, when he was in chemotherapy. He got it out of a barn in Wisconsin, where it had sat for more than 30 years.

It has 80,000 miles on it, and it's in pretty good shape. The paint is worn out, and it needs some interior work. He loves this old car and wants to take my brother and me on a trip on old Route 66 next summer starting in Chicago and going to somewhere in Missouri.

I'm 14, and my brother is 12. Dad has done a lot of work on it. He's added seatbelts, modern disc brakes and dual master cylinders; he's converted the generator to an alternator; and he's added an electronic ignition and a modern carburetor.

Mom is not thrilled with the road-trip idea. She says the car is too old and undependable.

For example, the gas gauge doesn't work (Dad says that he just has to know how far he's driven), it does not have air conditioning and he disconnected the heater. He promised to get the non-working AM radio repaired and fix the small hole in the front floor before we go.

Who is right — Mom or Dad?

Should we go on this trip, or will we break down in the middle of some cornfields in Illinois? Are we going to melt in this old car?

Dad says the vent windows and fender vents will keep us from getting too hot. The car is two years older than my dad. He really wants to take this trip. Thank you.

– Zach

Ray: Will you break down in the cornfields of Illinois? Yes — and lots of other places. Will you melt in this old car? Yes, especially when you're stopped or broken down, which will be often.

Tom: Should you go on this trip? Absolutely!

Ray: No question about it. It sounds like a wonderful adventure. And breaking down will just be part of the adventure. It'll give your dad a chance to show his sons how to handle adversity and solve problems, and how to take things in stride. And, since he's a guy who wants to make this trip in a '62 Studebaker, he'll also show his sons that fun can be had under almost any circumstances, even when it's 106 F in the breakdown lane.

Tom: I understand your mom's concerns. That's her job in the family — to worry about things like, oh, life and death. But your dad doesn't sound reckless to us. He's given this car a lot of upgrades, including the addition of seatbelts. And he plans to take the old, slower Route 66, rather than risk your safety at 75 mph on the highway with tandem trailers whizzing by.

Ray: So my suggestion is to assure Mom that you're taking reasonable precautions. That means bringing two things along with you.

Tom: No. 1 is a cellphone, so that when you break down and your dad is unable to fix the problem himself, you can call for help. You may even want to download our iPhone app called "Breakdown Lane" from iTunes.

Ray: It uses your iPhone's GPS data to find the closest highly rated repair shops anywhere in the country — whatever cornfield or city you break down in.

Tom: And the second thing you need to bring is a credit card. You'll use that to either pay for parts and repairs, or, if worse comes to worst, buy three bus tickets home and take the Studebaker's plates with you.

Ray: Either way, it'll be a great adventure that you'll all remember for the rest of your lives. So go for it. And have Mom call us if she needs some more convincing.

business, which began re-emphasizing low prices and restocked shelves in 2010, reversed the decline last year. The business has recorded five consecutive quarters of gains in revenue at stores open at least a year, an indicator of a retailer's health.

But its momentum has slowed. Wal-Mart said last week that its namesake U.S. business had a 1.5 percent increase in revenue at stores open at least a year. But the gain is short of the 1.8 percent increase Wall Street expected. It's also a slowdown in growth from the 2.2 percent gain the business posted in the second quarter and the 2.6 percent increase it had in the first quarter.

Wal-Mart issued a fourth-quarter profit outlook that's below analysts' forecasts. For the quarter, it expects earnings per share to be between $1.53 and $1.58, below the $1.59 analysts expected.

"It shows that its consumer is still struggling," said Ken Perkins, president of Retail Metrics, a research company.

Target, based in Minneapolis, initially struggled during the economic slowdown. Its fashion-forward image hurt it during the downturn: People didn't perceive Target as having the best prices.

To combat that, the retailer expanded its food offerings and began to emphasize low prices in its advertising — two things that put it in direct competition with Wal-Mart. It also started a 5 percent discount program for customers who use its branded credit or debit cards.

But its focus on prices and groceries cost it some cachet, and its performance has been choppy. The latest results show that Target has found a balance between fashion and price.

Target said last week that revenue at stores open at least a year rose 2.9 percent in the third quarter, roughly in line with Wall Street estimates.

For the fourth quarter, which ends in January, Target said that it anticipates adjusted earnings of $1.64 to $1.74 per share. That beast the $1.51 per share analysts expected.

"Looking ahead, we are confident in our holiday merchandising and marketing plans," Kathee Tesija, Target's executive vice president of merchandising, told investors last week.

The difference between the two discounters is becoming more apparent during the holiday shopping season, as both discounters attempt to cater to lure different shoppers into stores.

Wal-Mart said recently it will offer deeper discounts and a broader assortment of merchandise. The company also started its holiday layaway program a month earlier than a year ago and lowered its fees for the program from $15 to $5.

The move seems to working. It has booked an additional $300 million in layaway business compared with a year ago. The company will record sales for layaway during the fourth quarter.

Target, on the other hand, is trying to appeal to higher-end shoppers.

The retailer is teaming up with luxury merchant Neiman Marcus to offer a limited collection spanning from fashion to sporting goods.

More than 50 products from 24 designers, including Oscar de la Renta and Diane von Furstenberg, will be available at both stores and on their websites starting Dec. 1 until they are sold out.

Target is also bolstering its home area with names like Nate Berkus, which launched late last month.

Target told investors last week that it hasn't offered layaway like Wal-Mart because its customers haven't asked for it. Still, the retailer is playing up value.

Target for the first time is matching prices that customers find on identical products at some online competitors this holiday season, including Walmart.com and Amazon.com.

The price match program, which covers the period from Nov. 1 through Dec. 16, is an attempt to combat the "showrooming" trend in which shoppers use their smartphones while they're in stores to browse for products at cheaper prices.

LED replacement bulbs coming soon to stores

By Peter Svensson
AP technology writer

NEW YORK — Sorry to see 100-watt bulbs disappear from stores because they were energy hogs? You can now get LED bulbs that roughly match the 100-watters for size and brightness but use far less energy.

Until recently, your only alternative was a compact fluorescent bulb, which has several drawbacks compared with light-emitting diodes.

Osram Sylvania, a division of Germany's Siemens AG, said last week that it's shipping the first batches of its Ultra LED bulb to some Lowe's stores. The bulb uses 20 watts of electricity and costs $50. It's slightly larger than a regular 100-watt bulb, so it may not fit in all fixtures. Osram claims 25,000 hours of use, or more than 20 times the lifespan of a standard, incandescent bulb.

Competitors aren't far behind. Royal Philips Electronics NV plans to start selling its own, slightly brighter 100-watt-equivalent LED bulb at Home Depot's website in a few weeks for about $55. Startup Switch Lighting Bulb Co., with its unusual liquid-filled bulbs, plans to start selling 100-watt equivalents late this year or in January.

The federal government banned the manufacture of regular 100-watt bulbs on Jan. 1 as a consequence of new energy-efficiency standards. Much the way it forces car manufacturers to improve fuel efficiency, the government is forcing the lighting industry to move away from incandescent bulbs because they convert relatively little of the electrical input into light. Most of the energy is dissipated as heat.

In the next step, 75-watt bulbs will be banned at the start of next year, and 60-watt and 40-watt bulbs at the start of 2014.

You can't get tax amnesty if you don't apply for tax amnesty.

Time is running out for the Kentucky Tax Amnesty program. Your chance to have penalties and fees waived and your interest cut in half will expire on November 30. After that, more aggressive enforcement efforts will begin. So if you've been putting off paying your past-due amnesty-eligible taxes, the time to act is now.

Get started – apply for tax amnesty today.

Most of All

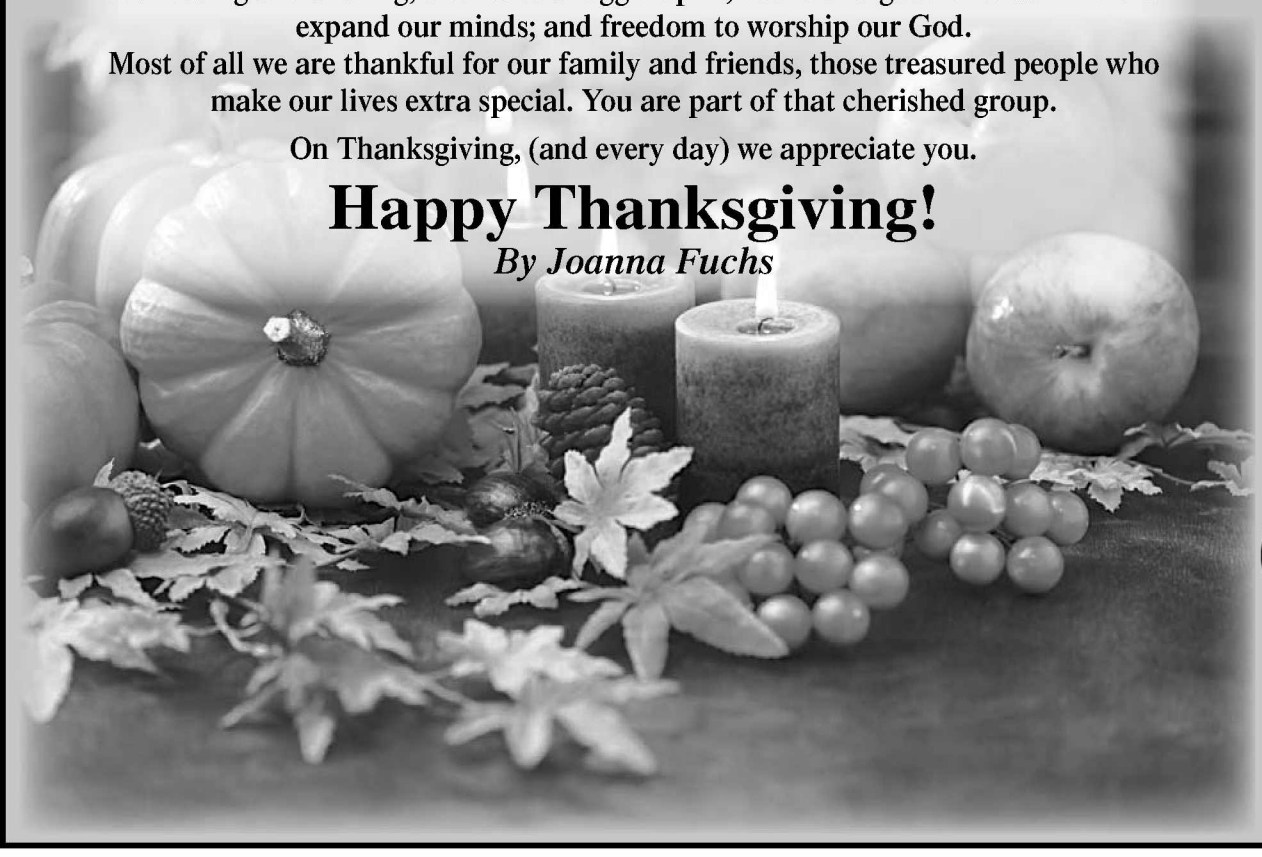

Thanksgiving Day brings to mind the blessings in our lives that usually go unnoticed: a home that surrounds us with comfort and protection; delicious food, for pleasure in both eating and sharing; clothes to snuggle up in, books and good entertainment to expand our minds; and freedom to worship our God.

Most of all we are thankful for our family and friends, those treasured people who make our lives extra special. You are part of that cherished group.

On Thanksgiving, (and every day) we appreciate you.

Happy Thanksgiving!
